

Plain Facts

There is probably no town in the Dominion of Canada which has a more certain and definite future before it, than the Town of Fort William. It has been selected after mature deliberation as the most suitable and in every way most desirable point of junction between lake and rail by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who have already built here three of the largest elevators in the Dominion. Their fleet of magnificent steamers, the finest on the lakes, make at this point rail connection to and from the Northwest, and hundreds of vessels enter the harbor here annually to bring freight and coal for the Prairie Provinces or to carry grain to the Eastern markets.

Nature has blessed the place in location and in natural advantages and it but remains for man to take advantage of nature's work.
