By RUTH CAMERON

How few people know half as much as they should of expression.

Both by pen and by the spoken word I mean. You don't see just what I'm driving at? Well, say your club or your society, should set of resolutions on some subject. Could you sit down at I don't believe you could. If you are an average person he infinite erasures, frequent interlinings and several draft finally done.

And again, suppose you were at a meeting. Could you stand up without a member you said when you thought next day?

If you could, you are one in a million. There is no ability that helps and profession as the ability to well, both on paper and in person. No matter what store of good of special training, what talents have, he is apt to find his path lacking in that ability.

It seems to me that just at now is should be given both at training children in the power of Of course, diaries aren't the fashion nowadays. As thing it's out must keep any chronicle. I imagine by have to be boiled down to a word a day.

I'm sorry, I think a carefully diary the best by Louise Alcott, the author of the world famed always encouraged and even required by her father.

No, I know that you did not give her the ability I have no doubt it contributed towards the simple make "Little Women" the beloved book it is.

And although I don't say the keeping of a diary your little girl I do think it will add something I know a man who has recently attained the company. It is part of his duties to preside and ors. This he does very well so far as appearance had sufficient training in self-expression, he suffered that he has actually begun to take tion to overcome his weakness.

Almost any big man will tell you that the well is the best kind of oil for the machine. You may not be able to give your child; you surely can try to furnish them with some
