The Problem of Female Employment—How Girls Should be Educated.

(Philadelphia Record.)

In every part of the civilized world the opportunities offered to self-supporting women have constantly increased, during the nineteenth century especially, until now there is an almost unlimited field of occupation in which the girl or woman of the period need only choose that which is best suited to her taste and ability. This fact is particularly conspicuous in our own country, where she is as free and untrammeled in this respect as is her brother. The number of women breadwinners, too, has grown with their opportunities, and has already assumed such proportions that some persons, with a present ratio of increase, before the women who work will outnumber the men who work. With this, however, I do not propose to meddle. The riddle will solve itself if left to itself. But what I do want to point out is the necessity, in the face of existing circumstances, for the sort of education, perhaps instruction would be a better word, which fits women for a business life in which they can earn money. Education coming under the head of culture, by which we understand accomplishments, is not to be considered here. The practical education more in harmony with the progress of this intensely practical age.

The problem of female employment.

DINGMAN'S

The problem of female employment would not seem so difficult if parents uniformly treated their girls precisely as they treat ther boys. A boy is expected to earn his own living, and is expected to earn his own living. It is the Best Laundry Soap in the market.

NERVOUS

The had mastered his trade and turned out his locomotive. He loved his work, and was proud of it. More than that, he stood on the verge of manhood with the consciousness that he was good for something, and with no nonsense in his head.
Even in the royal families of the Old World certain professions and pursuits are assigned to different young princes; and the princesses are in many cases and the princesses are in many cases subjected to severe practical training in all that pertains to the household.

"Why, in this age and generation, should not the same methods of teaching be applied to both sexes? Everyone knows that the daughters of a family which already possesses a population of not less than 3,000, many of them transient, it is true, but those who go ing be applied to both sexes? Everyone knows that the daughters of a family differ in their inclinations quite as much as do the sons. Why should not parents observe these little variations of talent, and bring up their daughters with the idea that these gifts are to be used in the future as a means of self-support, or even of acquiring wealth; for there is no reason why women in these days shall not make for themselves a competency even as men do. A very gifted and energetic woman says she does not see why women may not become millionaires by their own exertions as well as men.

We are as men do. A very gitted and energetic woman says she does not see why women may not become millionaires by their own exertions as well as men. But she is an inventor, and, although yet a young woman, has the foundation of the million well leid. Every one does not possess the sort of brains that can as readily be turned into money.
