Question: What should we do about cult-like groups soliciting on campus?

Garry Lee
3rd year Economics
"Everybody has the right to choose what to listen to and what to believe. I can say what I like, but you must decide whether or not to agree with me."

by Louise Batsch and Patricia Hutahajan

Rachel Caswell
2nd year Fine Arts
"I pay a lot of money to come to this school and would like to walk around campus without being bothered by them. I think they should be banned from campus especially if pushing their views on people."

Jacqui Goldberg
4th year Education
"Personally, I don't think we should allow it. I've been approached before and I find their persistence very annoying."

Dean Adansi
3rd year Economics
"Their activities should be limited by YFS to a specific area. While they're exercising free speech, they come across in a harassing manner. I've been approached five or six times by the same group."

Gus Sarris
2nd year Economics
"Let them solicit as long as they don't pressure you or other students. They've never bothered me. I've even had a few laughs with the music they play."

EXISTANCE

A PARABLE

High on a mountaintop lived a pretty amazing wizard. Well, everybody thought the wizard must be pretty amazing, even though nobody had actually seen him for many years, and each fall the tourists (who kept the economy of the village going ever since the smithee had closed down in 1737) who left were replaced by a bunch of toads.

He had to be pretty amazing. He was a wizard, after all. He lived on a mountaintop. The older people in the village remembered that he had a pointed hat, and poked people with his long stick (on which, when he wasn't performing mystical deeds, he used to roast marshmallows).

Definitely amazing wizard material.

One day, Faisal the Unrestrained (who got his nickname because he invested heavily in the market just before the crash of '89) said to himself, "I am going to see if this wizard is as pretty amazing as everybody says." Getting no response, he adjusted his black homburg and went to the town square and said it again.

The villagers wished Faisal well, throwing legs of mutton after him as he disappeared into the mid-morning mist, as was the local custom. Faisal never returned. But, that fall, a toad wearing a black homburg appeared at his door...

THE MORAL OF THE STORY: write for Excalibur or a wizard might turn you into a toad.
