

Happily, apart altogether from organized religion, we have an institution in our midst which is competent to furnish the necessary guidance to right thinking and right living - the University.

The University - and indeed every institution of learning-is the guardian of the truth as it has come to us from the past, and it is the duty of the University to proclaim the truth and to discard the false.

Gladstone:

"The might and mirth of Literature."

"The proper work of universities, could they perform it, while they guard and cultivate all ancient truth, is to keep themselves in the foremost ranks of modern discovery to harmonize continually the inherited with the acquired wealth of mankind and to give a charter to freedom of discussion, while they maintain the reasonable limits of the domain of tradition and of authority."

There is a well known Latin maxim veritas nihil veretur nisi abscondi.

Truth fears nothing but concealment
in other words

Truth seeks publicity.

Never before has the University had such an opportunity, due to the scientific equipment now placed at its disposal in the Radio, etc., to ^{spread} ~~spread~~ abroad truth.

There is no longer such a field as formerly existed for the exploitation of half-truth or even falsehood for the
