QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS. Miscellaneous.

BUCKWHEAT TO KILL QUACK GRASS - BREEDING TWO-YEAR-OLD FILLIES - CORN FOR FALL SEEDING.

1. Have a field that is quite full of quack; will buckwheat, sown on it this summer, kill the quack so that it will be fit for alfalfa next spring? What quantity of buckwheat should be sown per acre, and at what time?

2. Is it advisable to breed fillies coming two this spring? Is there not quite a risk breeding so young?

3. Which is the best variety of sweet corn to plant for milch cows in the fall?

Lennox and Addington, Ont.

Ans.—1. It will not be fit for alfalfa unless every bit of the quack is exterminated, and we have grave doubts as to the buckwheat making such a thorough job as this, though it is a pretty effective method of coping with this troublesome weed. Plow shallow this spring, and by frequent use of the cultivator, keep the ground stirred often enough to prevent new growth until late June or July, then sow 4 or 5 pecks of buckwheat per acre, which may possibly succeed in smothering out the somewhat weakened plants. Sow the buckwheat on a moist, fine seed-bed, so that it may make a quick growth.

2. Some consider it inadvisable; others practice it regularly, and claim satisfactory results. The opinion of many expert horsemen is that it is safe to breed well-grown two-year-old fillies, if well fed and given a good chance to develop while carrying their foals, and afterwards. It might be well to breed them for fall foals.

3. Stowell's Evergreen is a very good variety of sweet corn for early feeding, but considering the difference in yield, we think it more profitable to grow one of the Dent or Flint corns. Southern Sweet and Early Learning are good varieties for late harvest and September use. For earlier feeding, Compton's Early and Butler's Dent are satisfactory.

HENS TOO FAT—WHEN INCUBATION COMMENCES.

1. Is it possible to get hens too fat to do their best at laying? My hens are not laying up to what I think they should. They are very, very fat. Am feeding corn and buckwheat in the morning, and oats and barley at night.

2. What would be a suitable ration for sixty fowls?

3. Would plenty of gravel take the place of crushed oyster shells, the gravel being right at home?

4. How long do hens set on eggs before the eggs start to germinate?

O. C.

Ans.—1, 2 and 3. Yes, it is possible to have hens too fat to lay. Doubtless yours are, and the corn must be charged with a good share of the responsibility for this condition. The corn should have been discontinued some time ago, and a certain amount of vegetable and meat food given all winter long. Discontinue the corn now, and cut down the grain feed severely, so as to cause the fowl to forage for insects and green stuff. Give them a light feed of oats or buckwheat in the morning, say about three quarts, and enough barley in the evening to insure that they go to roost with reasonably full crops, for it does not do to starve hens if one wants eggs; also feed beef scrap or fresh meat of some kind, and bone meal or green bone, smashed up flat and fine with the back of an axe on a block of wood. Also give oyster shell, or some other form of lime, plenty of clean water and grit. Gravel will not take the place of oyster shell, for the latter is given not so much to provide grit, as to furnish lime. Both oyster shell and gravel should be fed.

4. In Bulletin No. 7, entitled Profitable Poultry Farming, by P. C. Elford, we find this statement: "Incubation is commenced by a hen sitting on an egg overnight and if such an egg is removed from the nest the next day, the germ dies and the egg becomes putrid."
