'Rebecca, dear Rebecca,' said Ivanhoe, 'this is no maiden's pastime--do not expose thyself to wounds and death, and render me forever miserable for having given the occasion; at least cover thyself with yonder ancient buckler, and show as little of your person at the lattice as may be.'

Following with promptitude the directions of lvanhce, and availing stores or offices in same building, occupied by W. C. Brown, J. P. and Miss Davidson. Also, the lower flat of the part of the window. Believes could part of the window, Rebecca could witness what was going on outside the castle, and report to Ivanhoe the preparations the assailants were making for the storm. Indeed, the situation which she thus obtained was peculiarly favorable for this purpose, because, being placed on an angle of the main building, Rebecca could not only see whatever passed beyond the precincts of the castle, but also commanded a view of the outwork likely to be the first object of the meditated assault. It was an exterior fortification of no The subscriber takes this method of great size or strength, intended to expressing his thanks to his namerous protect the postern gate through friends who during Forty-two years of which Codnic had business in this city have stood by him which Cedric had been recently dismissed by Front-de-Bouf. The castle moat divided this species of barbican from the rest of the fort, so that, in case of its being taken, STOVES, it was easy to cut off communication with the main building. In Through all these years of vacillating the outwork was a sallyport, and ing to recognize the merits of good, besieged entertained apprehensions for its safety; and from the mustering of the assailants in a direction STOVES & PLOUGHS nearly opposite, it seemed no less plain that it had been selected as a vulnerable point of attack.

These appearances she hastily communicated to Ivahoe, and added, 'The skirts of the wood seem lined with archers. although only a few are advanced from its dark shadow.'
