Alexander Carlisle, the Belfast ship-builder, was amongst the experts who testified at the resumed Titanic inquiry. He said unqualifiedly that there were not enough boats on the Titanic, saying that he had declared so over and over again to Lord Pirrie and others. He had prepared alternative plans, arranging for four boats and two boats for each davit. The plans had been submitted to Ismay, whilst Harold Sanderson and another director of the White Star Line were present. Neither plan was utilized because the Board of Trade had insisted on an increase in the number of boats.

The Daily Mail has reason to be glad that, as a result of the recent conference at Malta, some arrangement will be made with reference to France sharing with Britain responsibility for the protection of British interests in the Mediterranean. It was decided that, owing to the necessity for concentrating Britain's naval strength in the North Sea, her naval and military policy in the Mediterranean must be changed and her position in these waters be strengthened. The plan proposed is still to be considered by the Imperial Defence Committee, but the Mail has reason to be glad as follows: The weak squadron of four old armoured cruisers at present on duty for the British Navy in the Mediterranean will be strengthened by ships of the modern type, and some arrangements will be made with France. The exact limits of this division of responsibility does not involve any radical change in the entente between the countries, and no formal alliance is contemplated.

MORE SCARLET FEVER.—Yesterday two cases of scarlet fever were reported from a residence near the Cross Roads, one from Cabot Street, Lime Street and also a case in the Methodist Orphanage.

Mrs. Tucker Visits Museum.

Mrs. Tucker went down to visit the Museum yesterday. Mrs. Tucker says there's a silence hovering around the locality that makes a person feel the approach of a thunder storm, and when you reach the steps leading to the Chamber of Exhibits, you are at once led to believe that if you enter in you will meet death in a terrible form. No one is in sight and no friendly greeting awaits you. At the risk of never again returning to friends and kindred, Mrs. Tucker entered, feeling that she was encroaching on some sacred spot. She is a woman, however, that must take risks in order to hold her position with the public, therefore she braved the terrible silence. She pushed open the swinging door and was soon in the presence of stuffed seals, bottled fishes and ancient barges. 'Twas silent outside, but 'twas more than silent within the building; not a visitor was present. Out of the two hundred and thirty thousand inhabitants who live on the island not one save herself was present. As she moved around the spacious chamber her step resounded in such a manner that she feared herself. Soon the genial keeper hove in sight and greeted her with a kindly smile and did all in his power to make her feel at home. He appeared delighted that at least one woman had shown sufficient courage to visit the aristocratic quarters.

Mrs. Tucker says that the Museum would well repay a visit and takes this opportunity to intimate to the General Public that we have an up-to-date Museum in the city, that it is situated on Duckworth Street on the site of the old Athenaeum building. She would like it to be understood that you won't be arrested if you enter and act in a decent manner. A visit will cause your spirits to jump up, especially now when the cost of coal is so high, for she saw big samples of fine black coal in all directions. Mrs. Tucker would like to know if we knock off digging for coal in this country when we get sufficient to stock the Museum with exhibits. Coal boring, she says used to be talked of a great deal around here some years ago, but now we scarcely ever hear the name mentioned. If we have coal lying out in the wilds undisturbed, such as the samples show, Mrs. Tucker thinks Mr. Howley ought to get a gang of men with shovels to go and bring it in to town. 'Twould be a great benefit to us in here, and she says we'd get up a torchlight procession to welcome it. But on the other hand if all the coal is in the Museum, then we should give it to the poor, for 'tis only a fake inducement to drive men half mad looking for more. There's quite a lot of gold and silver samples in the Museum, so Mrs. Tucker says, and if 'tis all in the Museum it ought to be converted into hard cash and placed in the Revenue, but if there is any more out where the samples come from, she thinks we ought to be piloted to where it lies, for Mrs. Tucker says gold or silver is a very handy article to have now that the rents are gone up and the price of provisions is so high. Think it over.

Saw Husband Shoot Wife Dead

John Cummings Now on Trial at Montreal for Murder.
Montreal, June 6.—The case of John Cummings on trial for the murder of his wife last November, will probably go to the jury to-morrow.

Mrs. Donald Cameron, mother-in-law of the accused; Edwin L. Packer, a young man who was walking with Mrs. Cummings when the fatal shots were fired, and Chief Carpenter, who secured a confession from the accused, were examined at length to-day.

The afternoon session of the court, when Mrs. Cameron took the stand, was dramatic in the extreme, and Cummings, the accused was probably the only person in the court room who maintained absolute composure. Even when Mrs. Cameron shook her fist at him and cried: "May God forgive you, for I will not," and later told how her daughter had lived in fear of her husband and had on one occasion said to her, "Don't you leave the house, mother, for you will get killed as well as me, and there will be nobody to look after the children." Cummings only smiled slightly and showed no other trace of emotion. Mrs. Cameron testified that her daughter and her husband had lived together until she learned that Cummings had another wife in Scotland. The husband had left and had boarded at various places in the city. He had at times drunk heavily.

Packer at the morning session told how he had heard Mrs. Cummings express fear of her husband, and how he had escorted her from the factory where she worked on the night of the alleged murder.

Cummings appeared and fired two shots, one entering the head, and the other the back, the woman dying as a result.

is the finest blend of the two best wheats Canada produces—Manitoba Spring wheat and Ontario Fall wheat. One provides the rich gluten that makes bone and muscle, the other gives lightness and whiteness to the bread and pastry. Beaver Flour makes more loaves to the barrel than any other flour on the market—loaves that are sweet, nutritious and light, and it also makes delicious biscuits, cakes and pies.

Try it, and show your friends the excellence of your baking.

What Mr. Rockefeller Thinks He Has.
Since the appearance, recently, of Mr. Rockefeller in the witness-box, lawyers have been engaged in computing the present wealth of the richest man in the world, whose bland innocence and engaging desire to give information in his power have exasperated the Government investigator of the Oil Trust.

Mr. Rockefeller baffled the most searching questions aimed at elucidating how the parent company of the Standard Oil Trust maintained its control over the daughter companies since the Trust was officially dissolved.

The estimates now made in the Supreme Court's judgment have added at least £29,000,000 to the wealth of Mr. Rockefeller, whose fortune is believed to amount to £18,000,000 sterling. Mr. Rockefeller has himself confessed that he is unable to estimate within two millions the value of his possessions. His income from the Standard Oil Trust amounts to £8,000,000, and from other sources he receives annual revenues which fluctuate between three and five millions. The amount of his donations for philanthropic purposes exceeds £34,000,000.

Prisoner Was Cooked Alive.

Terrible Accident Enacted Before Firemen's Eyes at Sault Ste. Marie.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., June 5 — Cooked to death in a caged west end lock-up in sight of the fire-fighters, was the fate which overcame an Austrian named Andrew Worpelski, shortly after one this morning.

The man had been put there in an intoxicated condition early in the evening to await his removal to the Central police station. Apparently he had dropped a lighted match which ignited the bed. On the arrival of the department the place was in flames, and the hapless man could plainly be seen first running about in the lock-up and then attempting to crawl under the bed as the flames got to him.

The outside door was securely locked also the inside, and the only person with a key was the night patrolman, who could not be found. The charred remains have been removed to Simpson's morgue, and an inquest will open to-night. Members of the department say it was the most horrible experience in their career. At one time Worpelski was seen to go on his knees to the firemen outside, who could not bear to look at him.

Trick Driver Was Killed

In full view of hundreds of holiday-makers Mr. Arthur Heppell, better known as Professor Cyril, was killed on the pier deck of the West Pier, Brighton, when about to perform his customary high dive with a bicycle into the sea.

His method was to cycle down a plank about a yard wide sloping from the Pier Pavilion across the pier deck to a point over the sea, and then plunge with his bicycle into the water. Yesterday the bicycle swerved in the middle of the run.

The rider made a desperate effort to straighten it, but shot over the edge and amid cries of horror from the spectators fell head first on the deck twenty-five feet below. Death resulted from a fractured skull. He was aged thirty-five and had successfully performed for years the feat which yesterday ended tragically.—Daily Mail, May 22.

Exterminate

Nova Scotia Seals, Says Captain Farquhar.

Halifax, June 7.—Capt. J. A. Farquhar, one of the best nautical authorities in Nova Scotia, writes advocating a bounty of two dollars to exterminate the seals on Sable Island and the coasts of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. This is a different species of seal from that in Newfoundland. The captain's contention is that the seal is a pest and is highly destructive to our best food fishes. He estimates that as there are 30,000 seals on the sands of Sable Island and 12,000 along the maritime provinces coasts, a bounty of $2 would come to $84,000 and he contends this amount would be well spent if the seals were destroyed. A seal eats, he says, twenty pounds of fish daily which amounts he figures, to a value of $6,132,000 annually. The seal itself has no commercial or food value. Capt. Farquhar wants the government to pay such a bounty as he says is done on the United States coast.
