"You have been very unwise," said Miss Hart reprovingly.

"I have to learn that yet," he replied in her hompiness altogether very heartily, "That we man to say that you did not know before ty un allow that, do you not? And, dear," he went on ardently, after a moment silence, "If you have know that indeed, and if you have still gone on meeting me, how can I believe that all this time you have meant to say the said the still have to be a still

From Mabel sho had, perhaps, not quite wons to high an opinion, for Mabel's acquaintance with her being more intimate, led now and then to certain suspicions that made that young lady doubtful about the innermost character of her new friend; yet even Mabel was attracted by her too much to be disposed readily to think ill of her. "It seems to me that she is not quite straight-forward," she had said hesitatingly, one or twice to Keith (who, having his thoughts, on, on that point, had not perhaps, been able to do much to allay his sister's perpicivity, but her mother she had not said even so much as this. She was a kind-hearted girl, and hardly liked to hint at sumpleions she could not prove. After an hoar or two had passed, however, Mrs. Verner was scated by herself in the diding-room with her dosk and her account becoke before her, when Miss Hart's gentle ingers opened the door, and her soft step awing brought her to Mrs. Verner's side, own she unexpectedly plumined there on he floor, giving the elder lady, who was usy with her bills, rather a turn. to be her husband had just come into a very good fortune, she informed them. "I am I sure you will be glad to know that I shall not be poor," she told them meekly, and they were very glad, of course. They rejoiced in her happiness altogether very heartily. "The only thing we have regret is that we must lose you," they said to her. "But yot will not lose me forever, I hope," g Prudence answered very sweetly to this. "My George hopes only to be abroad for a "few years, and then we shall settle in England, and I hope I shall see a great deal of you."

"Say, mamma, is heaven beautifuller than Aunt Mary's parlor?" "Oh, ever so much, Johnny." "Well, then, I don't want to go there." "What! Why not?" "Cause everything 'll be too good to sit on."

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF A KINGSTON LADY.

A lady writing from Kingston, Ont., says: "Four months ago when my baby commenced teething, I decided to give Lactated Food a fair trial. I had been advised to use it by an experienced mother, who assured me that it would be of great value to my little one during the time it was cutting teeth. I have often thanked my lady friend for her kind advice; and to you as the makers of Lactated Food I would say that you certainly deserve all praise you as the makers of Lactated Food I would say that you certainly deserve all praise and success. My baby never had a bad hour during teething time, and he has grown fat and hearty, and he sleeps well."

There is comfort and safety for both child and mother, when Lactated Food is used. The mother that feeds her child every day on Lactated Food has never to complain of baby being cross, fretful and peevish. Babies who are fed on Lactated Food are always bright, happy and contented; and they are free from all prevailing ills that attack infants who are brought up on the common foods of the day.
