In almost every case the interrupter was comfounded by his own words.
Mr. Fielding's answers came like a shot, Instead of being annoyed by the interruptions, he just revelled in them. One could almost imagine that he was laying traps for the interruptions so but and effective were his ers, so pat and effective were his prompt replies. The interrupters en-abled the Minister of Finance to make nany strong points that he would no therwise have made.

A PRICELESS MSS.

A PRICELESS MSS.

London. April 12.—A manuscript of the highest importance will be sold at Sothebys next month. This is the original legal settlement constituting the British army. Most of the authorities have long considered that the British army originated at the Restoration in 1660, and the manuscript places this belief beyond doubt.

The signature of King Charles II. occurs four times in the course of the document, which extends to twenty-seven pages of folio.
