

TRACING A FUGITIVE BANK-ROBE. Some years ago an accident in New York. One day a gentleman who announced himself at the British consul at that port, entered my father's office, saying that he had come to speak with Mr. M.

"That is my name," I replied. "Fardon," said the consul, "but I was under the impression that Mr. M. was your name. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house."

"Certainly," and having shown the old gentleman into an inner room, I requested him to be seated and waited for him to broach the matter concerning which he had come to see me. "When you were a child," said the consul, "you were a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house."

"I am a descendant of your father's house," said the consul, "and I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house."

"I am a descendant of your father's house," said the consul, "and I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house."

"I am a descendant of your father's house," said the consul, "and I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house."

"I am a descendant of your father's house," said the consul, "and I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house."

"I am a descendant of your father's house," said the consul, "and I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house. I am a descendant of your father's house."
