

Ray H. Frank

MEASURING HEIGHTS.

Can you guess what these two little girls are doing with their dolls? They seem to be placing them back to back, and for what purpose do you suppose? Why, to see which is the taller, of course.

Reta and Greta are great friends. Their names are very much alike, as you see, and they are exactly the same age and the same height. They both got dollies on their birthdays, which were the same day, so they seem to be alike in a great many ways. There is just one way in which they are not the same.

Reta's papa is a rich man and lives in a fine house, but Greta's papa is not very well off, and lives in a pretty little cottage instead of in a big stone house. But that makes no difference to these two families, nor to the little girls. They are just as great friends as if they were both rich or both poor. They realize that wealth is not the best standard by which to judge people.