The freshmen year was full to the brim of episodes. At a birthday party in No. 10 the Seniors and Juniors attempted to cage the poor innocent freshmen. But they reckoned without their host. A ropé—a wire cutter—a hammer—a leap from the second story window and the perpetrators in the act and the laborious work of the former hours undone in a few minutes, the freshmen fee and the following immortal poem by Doc Gates a result.

(I.)

"Number ten," "number ten,"
"Number ten" boldly
So echoed through the hall
So cried the Juniors all.
Rushed they with many a roar,
Piled up against the door,
Never to open more
To 93,

'(2.)

Inside, the Freshmen six
Heard them the wires fix,
But yet the students knew
They'd soon be free.
Theirs not to make reply
Theirs but to eat their pie
Also to speechify
Of 93

(3.)

Water to right of them,
Water to left of them,
Water around them
Fell fast and free
Not that they cared you bet!
If they were dry or wet,
Mac, with his arms bedecked
Bound ahead to get
Of 93

(4.

There hung the rope in air,
Juniors thought it not fair,
Seeing the freshmen there
All the hall wondered.
Plunged in to spoil the joke,
Right through the crowd they broke,
Never a word they spoke,
Wires were sundered,
Crest fallen, then were they,
'93 blundered.
