

arrangement for looking into transboundary air pollution is the bilateral Research Consultation Group (RCG). Established by the United States and Canadian Governments in 1978, the RCG is a vehicle for coordinating research into the long range transport of air pollutants in North America by both countries, with specific responsibility for consulting on ongoing research programs, and facilitating technical information exchange and the comparability of data.