

INDONESIA

Indonesia's economic growth has been rapid and consistently high, averaging 7.5% per annum over the last decade. This growth has been supported by a combination of factors, including a strong domestic market, a growing export sector, and a stable macroeconomic environment. The government has implemented various policies to attract foreign investment and promote economic development.

Recent Economic Developments

A number of factors have contributed to the strong economic growth in Indonesia. These include a stable political environment, a growing domestic market, and a strong export sector. The government has implemented various policies to attract foreign investment and promote economic development. In 1981, the government introduced a series of reforms to improve the efficiency of the public sector and to attract foreign investment. These reforms included the privatization of state-owned enterprises and the introduction of a new tax system. The government has also implemented a series of measures to improve the infrastructure and to promote economic development.

- 3 -

INDONESIA

Future development of Indonesia's economy will depend on a number of factors, including the government's policies, the stability of the political environment, and the growth of the domestic market. The government has implemented various policies to attract foreign investment and promote economic development. In 1981, the government introduced a series of reforms to improve the efficiency of the public sector and to attract foreign investment. These reforms included the privatization of state-owned enterprises and the introduction of a new tax system. The government has also implemented a series of measures to improve the infrastructure and to promote economic development.