

one of the proudest and happiest of mothers. She still lives with her son at the earnest request of his wife, who was often left alone during George's frequent absence abroad on professional duties. As for Bill he has not even yet got over his wonder at his own good fortune, and ever blesses the day when he first met George in Covent Garden.

THE END.