

SHELVED CARNEGIE MOTION

Socialist League Hears a Lecture by W. J. Watson.

In Social Hall, corner of Bloor and Dufferin streets, under the auspices of that district's socialist league, W. J. Watson lectured on "Socialistic Conceptions."

He pictured a parallel line of street railway to the present system run by the city, and asked would there then be the failure of management so presently apparent in lack of power and rolling stock to move the congested traffic at certain hours of the day, or would the competition with the people's railway not force business methods to retain the trade?

An instance of this lack of the socialistic mind, which he described as being desirous to be of service to his fellows, was that of the manager of the street railway. Educated by the city as to the company's continuous violation of its contract, he was translated, Col. Lynch had got his reward for something of his name kind in the former, and if the City Engineer had the socialistic mind, he would hardly have taken service against it when it needed him most.

In provincial matters, the power dealt between the Ross government and Col. Selkirk, William Mackenzie, who was next touched upon. He strongly condemned the government for giving away the people's rights in this fashion, and then turned his attention to that phase of the question suggested by Col. Pellissier, who is not to believe the public can handle the business.

He pointed out that every private right of the citizen, whether of natural or natural privilege was mismanaged by the private corporations, who simply blind the concern for what would pay. They cared not the service was of no account so long as they could retain it, and he instanced several well-known cases. He combated the idea of the franchise grabber, who is not to be trusted, and he instanced that to-day money was more in need of brains than the possessors of the latter.

He described the hypnotizing influence which made franchise-grabbing and charter-mongering possible, and used as his illustration in this instance the attempts to commit public men and public bodies to "something" for the Grand Trunk Pacific.

His conclusion, he pressed home the idea that when we do not so much a material condition, but like the kingdom of heaven, was within you, and that its possession was utterly unchangeable and was really the only kind of man to be trusted to carry out the interests of the people. His mottoes were justice and usefulness, and on his coming into his material kingdom most of the monopolistic and the selfish class under which we groaned, would disappear.

A discussion took place on the subject, and the meeting adjourned till Friday night next.

Controlling Children.

Bursts of passion in a little child must be met by steady, gentle firmness on the mother's side. Loud outcries should be brushed not by angry words, but by a grave quietness of voice and speech, which helps to repress them by the force of contrast.

Passionate gestures, such as blows, kicks and drumming with the heels upon the floor, should be met by a physical force if necessary. Above all, the thing coveted, if it causes the child to be restless, should be withheld. The child should be taught to avoid the beginnings of wrath, to struggle against irritability, and to give way to the words when it rises in the mind, says The Washington Star.

Children often have generous, lovable natures, easily influenced for good. A wish to please is innate in them, and it is right for its own sake may be made strong enough to close the lips against the torrent of angry words that rushes to their lips, and so helps them to victory. Each effort at self-conquest makes the next one easier.

Keeping Trim.

Walking is the pleasantest way of reducing flesh, and the woman who brisks walks at a trot will take long, healthy steps, and will be free from the ailments of a sedentary life. Not only this is a sure cure, but it is much safer than starve, method that many women employ. Of course, the woman who is not fit to walk should not attempt it.

GUARD AGAINST GRIP.

Make the Body Strong and Able to Resist Disease By Using DODD'S Dyspepsia Tablets.

Dyspepsia is a growing menace to the health of the human family. For years it has been recognized as the father of disease, the breeder of pain and ache, the cause of the headache, the indigestion, the nervousness and the banisher of cheerfulness. But it is only of late years that it has been recognized as a monster that must be checked, or it will surely bring about the death of its victim.

Not only does it cury Appetititis in its train, but it weakens the body that is the source of strength, and it is the cause of many of the most serious diseases of the human family.

It is a trouble with Dyspepsia for one to eat a meal and not be able to digest it. A sour stomach and could never touch any food. I was told that I should use Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets, and I tried them. I had only used them a short time when I felt well and was entirely cured.

These great improvements, which will do so much to the health and well-being of the human family, are being made by the increasing demand for Dodd's Tablets.

The Serpent in Eden.

"Love is a strange thing," commented Charles. "Persons say that it endures till the stars shall fall, but I know better. There are circumstances which I will guarantee to cure the most afflicted, that is, afflicted with inflammatory rheumatism. I tried a vast variety of medicines, but all proved failures. I also spent much money with doctors, but never got any relief. I took the advice of a friend, and used four bottles of Pain's Celery Compound, with the result that I am now perfectly cured. I think it is the best remedy in the world."

man who wishes to reduce her weight must be careful of her diet, avoiding fat-making foods, but her best method is the pleasant one of long walks in the fresh, pure air, says The Ohio State Journal. To have this sort-of-door exercise really successful the woman must walk quickly and energetically. Strolling along in an indifferent way with the monotony of a plodder is not effective. It takes a quick, brisk step to induce a free circulation of the blood. Deep breathing should be practiced at the same time, for to have the walk really beneficial the fresh air should be inhaled thru the nostrils, filling the lungs and then exhaled as slowly as possible.

A Novel Fashion That Comes From Paris.

It is said in Paris that the reason for the great infatuation for ermine this year lies in the fact that the larger furriers had been ordering an enormous quantity of this delicate and rare pelts ever since last year. The ermine is not English King's coronation, and is the popular fashion is but the result of a glut upon the market. Many of the most stylish women, writes "Fancie" from Paris, wear their ermine demotechete, that is to say, without the small black and white spots, and the fur, so that they are again as unmarked in great quantities, and thru the ingenuity of some master couturiers, who probably did not know to what use to put them, they have been transformed into particularly original trimmings for military and for ball gowns, and are used in white tulle. Large toques are draped with regular pleats of tulle, into which the ermine tails are sewn at regular intervals and look like ears of black wheat thrown into profusion.

Father's Grim Revenge.

Signor Luigi Manara, a wealthy citizen of Bologna, having quarrelled with his son, determined that at his death the young man should inherit nothing from him. Accordingly he sold all his property, and received the proceeds, which amounted to more than 400,000, in paper money. This he placed on a bed, and then lay down and set fire to it. His valet found him next morning burned to death. The 400,000 in notes had been reduced to ashes, and thus the son will be penniless unless the numbers of the notes can be traced.

AMUSING ADVENTURES OF A LONDON DETECTIVE

I have had some amusing experiences in my time, said a confidential enquiry agent of long experience in detective work in London, to a writer in THE BITS. One of the oldest of them all happened only a few months ago. One morning a fashionably-dressed and attractive young lady called at my office and asked my assistance in what I quickly discovered was an affair of love and jealousy. She had reason to believe, she said, that a lady friend, whose description I address she gave me, was in the habit of meeting a certain gentleman, whose photograph she produced, and she asked me to keep a watchful eye on the lady's movements for a week and report results—which, of course, I promised to do.

She had not been gone more than an hour when another young lady, client, equally attractive, called and confided an exactly similar story to my ears. As her tale developed I discovered, to my amusement, that she was the very young lady whose movements I had been instructed to watch, and the lady whom she suspected of clandestine meetings was my client of an hour earlier. The funny thing, however, was that I frequently saw the gentleman of the photograph in a young lady's company; but his companion was quite a different person from either of my fair clients.

Social jealousy often puts a lot of work into the day with her sister, I was asked by one of her neighbors to shadow a certain lady who lives in the West End and suburbs. She goes up to town almost every morning, my client said, "and nobody knows where or why she goes." I have reason to think that she keeps a milliner's shop in the West End, and I shall be so glad if you will keep an eye on her for me. Well, I shadowed that lady for a whole week and found that she invariably spent the day with her sister, the widow of a wealthy man of title who lives in the West End; and that, so far from being the proprietor of a milliner's shop, my client would have loved to discover, she was a woman of high connections and without the roughest business connection with millinery.

Some years ago I had a very amusing case, which shows how even of the most irreproachable life, may be suspected of dark designs. An old gentleman who lives a secluded life in the West End came to me with a story of a suspicious character who passed his house on a certain time every day, and who had several times glanced up "in a threatening way" at my client as he was standing looking out of his window. "I am sure that man meditates some harm to me," the gentleman said, "and I want you to find out all about him." I will carry out your instructions, and do you think the dangerous man proved to be? None other than Mr. Jones, the man who had been suspected of your high court judges, who passed my client's house on his way home from the courts.

Few things are more strange than the slight grounds on which people base their suspicions, and how frequently with which these suspicions are altogether wrong. Not long ago a peppery gentleman came to me with a request to keep an eye on his wife. "I have reason to believe," he said, "that she is away from home during my absence in town, and see where she goes and whom she meets." I did as I was directed, and discovered that the lady left her house, usually carrying a small basket, and made her way to a house on the other side of the street, where she remained for about two hours. I learned also from the servant that the lady had an invalid in the house, whom the lady came to nurse, but who he was I could not discover.

I reported these facts to my client, and a few days later he returned, jubilant to explain the mystery and show me the man who was the cause of the mysterious invalid was none other than my client's own son, whom he had ordered out of the house a year or so earlier and forbidden to return. In the trace of him had been lost until his mother received a pitiful note from her son, informing her that he was going to live in a certain address and dare not return home, and it was in answering her boy and keeping his secret that she had incurred her husband's foolish suspicion. However, it all ended happily, for my client informed me that he had taken his son back again into his own home.

But these enquiries sometimes lead to unexpected discoveries. One of my clients is a pretty, ladylike woman, who came to me in great trouble. Her husband was in the habit, she said, of leaving home early in the evening and often not returning till late on the following morning, and he would not give her any explanation of his disappearance. She had been married but a few months, and this nocturnal habit only dated three weeks back. The story of my adventures when shadowing this gentleman—who, by the way, is a very superior, military-looking man—would take too long to tell. It will be sufficient, perhaps, to say that he tracked him to a certain low resort in the East End, and ultimately discovered that the husband was one of my fair clients, who was the chief of a notorious gang of burglars. A few months later he was caught being entertained at the country's expense.

Must Keep Out of Trade. The firm of Gordon, Hill & Co., of London, Feb. 7.—Other English men and women of title may go into "trade" as much as they see fit, and they are going in for it more and more—but the members of the Royal Family will not do so if King Edward can prevent it. The King has just put a determined veto on the plan of the gallant and sporty Prince Francis of Teck, who wanted to accept the tempting offer made to him by a wealthy "City" firm to represent them on the London Stock Exchange. The price is the son of the late Duke of Teck, and incidentally, the brother of the Princess of Wales, who in all probability some day will be Queen of England. The firm of Gordon, Hill & Co., offered His Highness $100,000 a year for his services. There several other offers made him higher offers, and it began to look as if the prince could get about any salary he pleased if only he played the different bidders against each other skillfully enough. At this point, however, the King stepped in, with the remark that Prince Francis' going "into trade" was out of the question. His Highness' position as close relative of one of the most prominent members of the Royal Family, under Edward VII. pointed out to be a delicate one as matters stand at present, and in the event of the Princess of Wales becoming Queen, it would be impossible. The prince will not go into the city—which is tough luck for him, for no appropriation from the royal till, as he is hit hard up, as his father was before him. His Highness, who is now 23, has had a military career thus far, being now major of the 1st dragoons. He was educated at Sandhurst, and has served in India, Egypt and Ireland. He saw part of the South African campaign as a captain in the remount department.

THE WOMAN OF TO-DAY. Editor Sunday World: I've been reading your editorial on "The Woman of Today" in last Sunday's World, and I think it is only fair to reply to it from a woman's point of view. You'll kindly publish the following: You say "Progress has been a marvelous boon to woman's advancement, irrespective of sex. You also say it has wrested from her many of her rights, and that it is quite impossible. No natural right can be ignored without punishment to its possessor. The courtesy a woman receives from the opposite sex comes, innately to her by natural law, not only seen in the human, but between all types of mammals and females. Darwin says the human male is the only male that abuses the female. If woman has invaded the professions and responsible positions in society, she has done it irrespective of sex, but from her mentality, being a woman, she has done it. Why drag in the sex question, where no sex is required? Sex is required for the propagation of the race, and that alone. Are men educated entirely for becoming fathers? If not, why should woman be educated only on lines of maternity, or sexual lines? Being a woman embraces much more than being a female. Why deprive her of any avocations in life that nature has deemed her normal? You say we have women lawyers, women doctors, women merchants, women clerks, women thieves, women rogues, and women reprobates. Having them proves their ability to be there. There are now in the United States more than 100,000 women physicians and surgeons, 3400 women clergymen, and 100,000 lawyers of the gender "she." The "right" of motherhood. Also monopolizing the rights of the bees, by not allowing them to build their own honeycombs, but insisting upon the possession what they artificially have prepared. Nature sets a limit of capabilities on both sexes and that is the laws of parentage. A man cannot be a mother, and a woman cannot be a father. Outside of this, don't talk any more about womanly men and masculine women.

British Golfers' Visit. The London Daily Telegraph declares that there is "more than a promise" that a team of the Oxford and Cambridge Golfing Society will visit Canada, and the United States during the present year. "It is to be hoped," says The Telegraph, "that no peculiarly inconsiderate of the visiting team should from being chosen, as American young men have taken very kindly to golf, and will take a good deal of beating. It may be remembered that a similar project fell thru last year owing to the attitude of the United States Golf Association in regard to the amateur status. It was proposed that some portion of the expenses of the visit should be defrayed by American clubs, and objections being raised to this course of action, the contemplated visit was abandoned.

The arrangements under which the team is to visit this continent have not yet been made public, but the project is in the hands of Mr. G. Herbert Windsor, vice-president of the United States Golf Association, who will brook his plans to that body at the annual meeting, and is confident that the arrangements are such that no possible objection can be raised. It has consisted of many of the most prominent golfers in Canada and the States, and the details of the visit are all perfected, with the exception of the sanction of the United States Association, of which he feels assured.
