THE WHEEL O' FORTUNE

By LOUIS TRACY. Author of "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," "The Captain of the Kansas," etc.

(Continued.) Mr. Fenshawe was skeptical. Mirage-phenomena were familiar to him, but never had they dealt with natural objects beyond a range of a few miles.

There are certain matters which must be cleared up, that nature has assumed the role of guide, he said dryly. "I have been well aware during the past few days that you were not able to fix the exact place described in the papyrus."

Mr. Fenshawe's pride was wounded. All the wrath of the disappointed connoisseur welled forth in his contemptuous words. Their very calmness and precision showed the depth of his anger, and von Kerber like Abdur Kad's felt that the time for specious pretence had gone.

"Yes, I was waylaid and robbed while driving from the station to the harbor," "Purposely, do you mean? Was the papyrus the object of the attack?"

"Then this man, Alfieri, knew of it?" "I have never concealed that from you." "It is hard to say whether you have not concealed, Baron von Kerber. My confidence in you is shaken. How can I know that this latest version of Alfieri's amazing interference in your affairs is the true one?"

"No man is so sensitive of his honor as he who is conscious of his own lapses. Von Kerber started as though the other had stabbed him. He resumed me from my assault, yes? Mr. Haxton is aware of it, and unless I am mistaken Miss Fenshawe also is no stranger to the news, seeing that our second mate is so greatly in her confidence."

"The older man, still watching the last wreaths of the mirage, seemed to be dead to the Austrian's biting allusion to Irene. I did not look for such a wag of deceit," he murmured. "The papyrus was genuine, and I sought no other proof of honesty. You say Mrs. Haxton and my granddaughter are in this part of silence. Let us have their testimony."

"Irene, as might be expected indignantly disclaimed any sympathy with von Kerber's methods. By chance, of the part Mr. Royson took in the affair at Marselles."

she said, "My maid told me. It was the gossip of the ship. Yet when I questioned Mr. Royson himself, he refused to discuss the matter, owing to some pledge of secrecy drawn from him to Baron von Kerber. You forget, grandad, how often you have told me that I did not understand this undertaking sufficiently to justify my hostility to it. I have never believed in it, not for one moment. If I wish to know what happened at Marselles, why not ask Mr. Royson himself?"

"Yes," said Mr. Fenshawe quietly, "that will be well. Send for him. Irene."

It was noteworthy that he addressed no question to Mrs. Haxton. That lady, nervous and ill-at-ease, could not grow how far the rupture between von Kerber and his patron had gone. She felt intuitively that the Austrian was puzzled, perhaps alarmed by the presence of an official expedition in the very territory he had hoped to explore without hindrance—yet his manner hinted at something in reserve.

Though he quivered under Irene's outspoken incredulity, his aspect was that of a man whose schemes have been foiled by sheer ill-luck. A rogue unmasked will grovel; von Kerber was defiant. For the moment Mrs. Haxton was silent, and the exact place described in the papyrus. I could pardon that. We are in a country where landmarks are bewilderingly alike, and therefore apt to cause confusion. But how comes it that our rivals can go straight to the place we are in search of, while we wander blindly in the desert? You assured me that you were the only copy of the papyrus extant with the sole exception of the photographic reproductions supplied to me. Is that true? And, if it is true, who gave these others the information that has brought about our failure?"

PLAYS AND PLAYERS

"PAID IN FULL" BY HARKINS TONIGHT

Tonight, at the Opera House, the W. S. Harkins Company will present "Paid in Full," one of the greatest plays given in America in years and now one of the big successes in New York, being played at the Grand Opera House.

The Recorder of Halifax says:—"Paid in Full" was promised by Manager Harkins to be one of the best plays he has ever presented and it is. Last night the academy was crowded, and at the conclusion of each act, curtain calls were demanded, and at the conclusion of the great scene in the third act, there were several curtain calls.

As seats are selling fast, an early call is advised. Tonight after the performance it will be interesting to listen to the comments as to the ending of the play. No two opinions will be alike.

THE TEMPLE FAIR OPENED BY MAYOR

Large Patronage on Opening Night of Attractive Entertainment Which Will Last a Week.

The opening of the Alexandra Temple of Honor Fair in their new hall near Douglas avenue, in Main street on Saturday night was a great success. There was a very large attendance and all the departments were kept running in all blast. The Red Cross supper room, the piano and the booths downstairs were patronized to such an extent that those who waited on them were kept as busy as they could be.

At 8 o'clock Mayor Bullock declared the fair officially open. He was introduced in a brief speech by Dr. W. F. Roberts who sketched the history of Alexandra Temple, telling of the reasons why they had been compelled to change their quarters three times. He noted, among these, the growing membership of the organization and said that when they had appealed to the public for help it had always been extended to them.

His Worship complimented Alexandra Temple on the possession of such a commodious hall as the one in which they were. He believed that it was largely due to the efforts of Dr. Roberts that they had it and he took occasion to pay a compliment to him. He also complimented the ladies who had arranged the fair on their taste and skill as evidenced by the appearance of the various booths. He spoke briefly in commendation of temperance and in conclusion said he had much pleasure in declaring the fair open.

Much care had been exercised in decorating the new hall for the fair, many electric lights have been used and the general effect is pleasing and artistic. The front of the building is outlined with lights and a large sign "Temple Fair" is placed that it can be seen from a great distance. The entrance has been arched over from the street with evergreens. Within, 1,800 incandescent lamps have been brought into use so that the place is very brilliant. The walls have been hung with flags and designs of bright and attractive coloring.

The lower floor is taken up with the various booths. On the right hand side of the entrance proper is one called South Africa in which beautiful dolls are exposed for sale. On the left of the doorway is a balcony from which the orchestra plays. Underneath this there is the Red Cross tea booth, while near at hand are the Australian and Indian booths each filled with tasty fancy work. The centre of the floor is taken up by a booth called Great Britain. This is in white and all the others are in various colors and each given over to the sale of souvenier goods or candy.

At the upper end of the hall will be found the North Canada and the Gypsy tent. The latter which, as the name indicates, is given over to fortune telling. The opening tea commenced at 6 o'clock on Saturday night and until 11 o'clock there was a stream of visitors to the Red Cross dining hall. The fair will continue until next Saturday night.
