A RIDDLE WITH A POINT

And though your head's so very small.

And though your head's so very small.

"Nancy," said the Riddle Lady next day, "will you please read this riddle for me? I have such a bad cold, I'm afraid that nobody can hear me. I don't believe there are any very hard words, or rathet I mean I believe there aren't any. Here!"

Nancy took the paper and got on a platform and read the riddle to all the Riddle Land people and Mother Goose people. She had guessed it before she was half through reading, but she couldn't stop in the middle and tell the answer. That wouldn't have been fair. "You hold the cloaks of queens and kings,

"You hold the cloaks of queens and kings,

"You hold the window sill, "When Ellen dusts and cleans and sweeps, And shoes the dirt all out in heaps.

FOR OVER 80 YEARS THE OLD HOME TOWN AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has been the family remedy for coughs and colds.

It has stood the test of time—it has proven itself reliable—It has won its place in the home during the winter months and it should be there NOW.

"But when you're in your cushion bed, All covered up except your head, It must be stacks and stacks of fun To tell the others all you've done!

"And though your head's so very small,
I do not think you dull at all!
I think you're sharp and very bright,
And work and work with all your might."

"I know what it is!" shouted the little! Wheelbarrow-Boy, who had gone to London to get himself a wife. "It's a pin."

"How do you know?" asked Nick.

"Because," said the little Wheelbarrow-Boy, "It says, 'Needles and pins, needles and pins, when a man marries his trouble begins!" And who should know better than I? The minute I put Betsy-Anne Spragg into my wheelbarrow to take her home to keep house for me, my troubles began, for the wheelbarrow was an old one of Daddy's and fell to pieces the minute I put her in it. Of course, we were only playing, but I decided then and there never to really get married."

"My! My!" laughed the Riddle Lady. "What a long speech! But you guessed the right answer. It is a pin! And the prize is a nice new little red wheelbarrow. But it isn't big enough to haul around even a pretend wife, I'm afraid."

"Oh thank you!" said the little.

BY DR. CLIFFORD C. ROBINSON ABDOMINAL INJURIES.

When a careful study is made of the human figure one is struck with the adequate protection afforded against injuries. The cranium (head), is securely boxed. The thorax or chest covers the heart and lungs, also carefully protected by the barrel structure of the ribs.

But when we come to the lower divison of the trunk, we find that the abdominal viscera are only protected by the walls of comparatively soft tissue. Practically all of the abdominal viscera are easily open to outside attacks.

Abdominal injuries may result from a great variety of causes. The first class are termed subcutaneous, including contusions. The second are open wounds.

Subcutaneous injuries may be confined to the abdominal wall or there may be lesions of the viscera also. Open injuries may be confined to the abdominal wall without penetrating it,
