

As first love to the bosom,
So you to the year,
In your innocent beauty
And freshness appear!
The summer may bring us
Its sunshine and flowers,
Perfuming the vallies,
Entwining the bowers,
O'er beds of sweet roses
The zephyrs may fly,

And breathe on each flower,
The same balmy sigh.
In loneliness bending,
Beneath the rough blast,
Your gentle forms raising,
When danger is past.
Shining on fading on!
Like hope ye appear,
First flowers of the spring-time,
Bright gems of the year.

A Man—‘The man whom I call deserving the name, is one whose thoughts and exertions are for others, rather than himself,—whose high purpose is adopted on just principles, and never abandoned while heaven and earth can afford means of accomplishing it. He is one who will neither seek an indirect advantage by a precious road, nor take an evil path to gain a real good purpose.’—Sir Walter Scott.

Dandelions.—A correspondent of the Springfield Journal says, ‘Last summer I transplanted dandelions in June. This spring I have cut them three or four times a week, and must say they are a very superior article for the table—they occupy little room, and require very little attention. I make this statement now as this is the season for transplanting them, and I know of no better green nor any thing more profitable for a small portion of a garden—they are plucked about six inches apart.’

Those who waste their income by splendor in dress and equipage may be said to resemble a city on fire, which shines by that which destroys it.
