Flashed its everlasting bloom-Flower of Easter morn! Amusing the Children.

Many of the household recipes printed in the newspapers are glaring frauds, calculated to engender trouble and cause infelicity in the domestic circle. The other morning Mr. Newbanks read in his favorite journal an article on "How to Amuse the children at Home." The following formula was one of the plans suggested: "Plaster-of-Paris is cheap : let the children have some to mix with water, and pour into anything hollow, as, for instance the halves of old tin animals which have been parted asunder, and the result will delight their young souls." This scheme favorably impressed Mr. Newbanks. It possessed many advantages over such juvenile pastimes as constructing mud pies, falling into ponds, and stoning the neighbors' cats and dogs, and was designed to develop an artistic taste affirm that you will testify, etc. in the children. In the afternoon, as Mr. Newbanks was deeply absorbed in the composition of an elaborate paper on the "Iavisibility of the the defendant, live in your house?
