GOT OXFORD DEGREE AT 50

Women Who Heads National Educational Association Has Had Remarkable Career—Knows School Work.

Boston, July 9.—The election of Mrs. Ella Flagg Young to the presidency of the national educational association marks a climax in the affairs of that body and may mean a great deal to the reform movements in education that are becoming more and more insistent in every part of the country—movements which have a two-fold object: to make education a thing that will be of definite, practical value to every child in the land, as well as a source of enjoyment in life itself; and secondly, to minimize the influence of politics and school-book publishers in the schools as well as the education of the country.

It also means, of course, that the demands of women for equal rank and pay with men in the schools of the land will be strengthened and given more heed and consideration by school boards. And it is a recognition of the fact that intellect and ability of the highest educational order are not confined to one sex. Looking at it from this point of view, the woman suffragists may be said to have scored a point.

Knockout To Ostracism.
The election of Mrs. Young at the age of 65 to this high office should be an inspiration to a great many people in every walk of life, for it is something like a knockout blow to that famous theory of Dr. Osler's that a person at 60 is "all in" and should be chloroformed, and it may also give those who believe that a teacher should be retired and placed on the pension list at 60 something to think about.

For here is a woman at 65, a-ive mentally and physically; woman of such acknowledged ability that she was chosen a year ago from a wide field of eminent educators at the one fit person to be superintendent of the schools of Chicago—a job which is far and away bigger than the job of president of any university in the world, as far as magnitude, actual work and responsibility are concerned.

But of course it will be said that Mrs. Young is a remarkable woman. That is true. And there is no doubt if she were a man she would be a remarkable man, for she possesses those traits of character which seem to be fundamental in real greatness—modesty of bearing; a clear, cool brain; and great capacity for work.

She is one of the type you have to know to fully appreciate and the best test of her genius lies in the fact that she is thought most of by those who know her best and have known her longest.

The teachers from Chicago, among whom she has worked all of her life, simply worship this woman. They have absolute faith and confidence in her and that includes the most radical among them as well as the most conservative.

Got Oxford Degree At 50.
And nobody wants to suppose for an instant that the "highbrows" in education have anything on Mrs. Young, for she quietly went over to Oxford when she was 50 years old and took her degree there. And what is more she has the unusual distinction of having been one of the first professors of teaching in the world—she held that new chair in Chicago university for several years.

So it will be seen that in electing Mrs. Young president of the National Educational Association the members have honored one of the most eminent if not the most eminent teacher in this country—a woman of demonstrated executive as well as professional ability.

But really she doesn't look the part—at a first glance. There is no dash or strut or swagger to Mrs. Ella Flagg Young. She is a modest-looking woman of middle age and medium size, with eyes that are over-emphasized by the glasses she wears—eyes that are keen, or thoughtful, or twinkling as the humor of the moment may dictate—eyes that are pleasing and comforting to those who knew the woman.

Her hair is deeply tinged with gray; her face has earnest lines of thought in it when she is in repose, but it is radiant when she speaks. Her voice is a soft, womanly, motherly voice. Her lips are full and she presses them into a sort of pout when she is talking and in the intervals of conversation.

It is a rather curious thing, but this woman's face reminds one of Abraham Lincoln. It has something of the same look of sadness in it; the same high cheek bones; the same large, deep eyes; the rather heavy lips and that capacity for radiance which changed Lincoln's whole personality in a moment. And this woman has in her way much of Lincoln's great capacity in the management of people, and much of that kind of patience for which he was celebrated.

Chicago's Own.
It is a critical time in the educational work of this country and nobody realizes this more keenly than Mrs. Young. She has been a student of education and a teacher of education all of her life and she has been a success in every station she occupied. And she has occupied pretty nearly every station on the road from the primary school to the college and university.

She is more of a credit to herself however, than she is to any educational institution and she is a further evidence of the fact that it doesn't make much difference where you get your education if you've got it.

One thing is sure. Chicago can claim her as its own—so far as her education is concerned; for it is in the windy city that she graduated from a high school and took up her life work of teaching.

Pres. Harper of Chicago university was one of those who didn't like women as educators in the higher institutions of learning, but he changed his mind after he met Mrs. Young and he offered her a "chair of pedagogy" in the university.

"Don't call it pedagogy," said Mrs. Young. "Call it the department of education."

And it was called the department of education and there Mrs. Young

Lace Over Straw is Strongest Note in the Women's Millinery

The girl who wears a straw hat covered with lace can't go far wrong on the summer's millinery styles. The hat shown here is of white straw, covered with black chantilly lace. The elaborate arrangement of ribbon is turned up, the straw being slashed and a magenta colored satin ribbon being drawn through the aperture. The brim is shown up very high on the left side and back.

demonstrated that she could teach teachers.

She demonstrated that she knew education root and branch and understood the relation of educational work to the acquisition of knowledge in a rational way. When asked why she gave her life to teaching she said:

"Because I love it. It is the grandest work in all the world. I have taught every grade from the first one up, and each one was an inspiration."

Was Born in Buffalo.
When she was elected superintendent of the Chicago schools, she said: "There are two things to watch sharp for. One of these is to cheer and inspire the teaching force so that the school shall be truly educational for the teachers; the other is to look sharp for the administrative side. One must be able to advise the board as to the best ways of meeting the needs of schools and children. Otherwise their work ceases to be educational and becomes political, or at least haphazard. All of the failures of superintendents have been due to a slipup in one or the other of these. I believe in personal contact. All discussion and instruction I think ought to be informal and conversational."

Mrs. Young was born in Buffalo on Jan. 15, 1845, and she received most of her early school education there. Her father, Theodore Flagg, although never engaged in educational work, was a distinguished mathematician, and from him the daughter got her excellent grounding in that subject, as well as other undergraduate courses. In fact, the home influences were of the greatest importance in her subsequent development.

When she was a young girl she moved with her family to Chicago and graduated from the high school there. In 1862 she entered the Foster primary school as a teacher, and all of her subsequent experience in teaching has been in that city. But she never ceased to be a student, which is the most important thing in any professional career.

Marriage No Bar to Work.
She was married in 1868 to William Young, but her domestic life never interfered with her educational work. During the first part of their married lives Mr. Young was engaged in agricultural work as a merchant in Chicago. Later he went to California with his brother, a distinguished physician. The change was made for the benefit of Mr. Young's health. He died of consumption and Mrs. Young has been a widow for more than 26 years. Mr. and Mrs. Young had no children and she has no near and few remote relatives.

She taught in all the grades of the Foster school and was its principal. Then she went into the grammar grades and the high and the normal, and after a year's study she took a degree in Chicago university and was a professor there five years. She was a success everywhere and she turned out such boys as Peter Finley Dunne, Mr. Dooley, and George Farwell, the millionaire and a host of others. The day Mrs. Young assumed her duties as superintendent of public schools Peter Dunne, George Farwell and a lot more of her "boys" lined up in the office to congratulate her.

"I never thought Peter would turn into a Dooley," said Mrs. Young to the group, as she greeted them. "He was a good boy, but—well, I had only moderate hopes for Peter." And Peter giggled much like the school-boy of old.

RECIPES FOR BERRY TIME

Gooseberries are most famous of all garden fruits in English song and story; and from English cook books come all the best recipes for serving tarts and puddings.

Gooseberry Trifle.—Stew one pound berries with three ounces sugar and two tablespoons water until tender, then rub through a colander. Divide a sponge cake into slices, place in deep dish, cover with the gooseberry pulp, pour over it one-half pint warm custard and allow it to become perfectly cold. When ready to serve whip one-third pint of cream stiffly, spread over the pudding, sprinkle with almonds and serve.

Gooseberry Fool is a favorite dessert. Simmer one quart of berries in two cups of water, and when the fruit reaches the boiling point, press through colander. Mix with one-half pound of sugar and chili. Thicken one quart of boiling milk with the beaten yolks of three eggs, season with nutmeg and a little salt, and stir into the gooseberry pulp. Make stiff meringue with the beaten whites of the eggs, or serve with whipped cream.

Gooseberry Jam.—Prepare berries and add an equal weight of sugar. To seven pounds of fruit add one pint cold water. Put in preserving kettle, let stand by the side of the fire until sugar is dissolved, then add fruit. Bring slowly to boiling point, stir occasionally, then boil slowly until the mixture is thickened. Test on a cold plate; this will be the jam has boiled for about forty minutes. Pour into jars, cover at once with paper brushed over with white of egg, and keep in a cool, dry place.

The Blackberry is the most important of the small fruits. It contains iron, and is therefore used as a tonic in cases of weakness, anorexia and dyspepsia. Its juice is undoubtedly remedial in all diseases related to indigestion, and is especially valuable for several troubles of the month, throat and eyes.

Blackberry muffins are not commonly made; they serve equally well for breakfast or as a simple dinner dessert.

EASY LIFE OF A REGICIDE

Luccheni, Who Killed Empress of Austria in 1898, is Leading a Luxurious Life in Swiss Prison.

London, July 9.—It has often been stated that Luigi Luccheni, the man who murdered the Empress Elizabeth of Austria in 1898, had either died in prison from the effects of the severities to which she was subjected, or was hopelessly insane and chained in a dungeon. Harry De Windt of the Daily Express contributes to that paper the result of a visit made to the assassin on Wednesday, showing that the prisoner is leading an enjoyable, almost a luxurious life in the old prison of Geneva, known as L'Eveche. He is in excellent health.

It was as a delegate to the Paris Penal Congress that De Windt was allowed to talk with Luccheni, who has spent no one except prison officers for years. De Windt found him in a light, airy ward, overlooking the lake. He is employed at bookbinding, but this is voluntary as he need not work unless he is so disposed. He was cheerfully and amicably chatting with other convicts.

He has never been in a dark cell except for three short periods for refractory conduct, one of which was a recent attempt to stab the governor of the prison with a weapon he had secretly fashioned from a sardine can. He told De Windt he was extremely well. He has an abundant diet, a pint of wine and four cigarettes daily.

De Windt described him as a tall, well-built, sturdy little man, with dark, restless eyes and a perpetual sinister smile. He constantly feigns insanity, but succeeds poorly. His intelligence is above the average. He reads much, especially the works of Montesquieu, Rousseau and Dickens.

He has a large cell, a comfortable bed, a writing table, a well filled bookcase and electric light. The walls of his cell are covered with picture postcards, including portraits of European sovereigns, notably the Kings of England, Spain and Italy. De Windt was astonished to find among these portraits those of the Emperor Francis Joseph and of the Empress Elizabeth.

These had not been noticed by the governor of the prison, who when De Windt called his attention to them tore them down and destroyed them. De Windt raised the question whether the brutal, senseless slayer of the universally beloved Empress is being adequately punished.
