to interfere is in question. Under the constitution the Executive of a State may demand aid to overpower a rebellion against his authority, as Kellogg does now, but it is contended that the midnight order of a corrupt Federal Judge, given without due inquiry or proper form, could not have constituted Kellogg the legal Executive of the State. The President is urged to interfere for the reinstatement of the unpopular Kellogg because the administration is allied to that faction in Louisiana, and because the New Onleans emeute may be made a precedent by dissatisfied of New York alone has the power to shut this way to the ocean from plan adopted by Mr. Jones, in apportionmay be made a precedent by dissatisfied power to shut this way to the ocean from military factions in other States. ral land and naval forces are said to be under orders to hold themselves in readiness for transport to Louisiana. The President is said to have expressed the intention of taking the field in person, if necessary.

Should Federal coercion be attempted the action of the rebellions party of Louisiana is uncertain. The results of the late war taught them that resistance is useless, and they may act on the lesson and submit. Or they may do as they did before—assert what they deem of arms until they are forced to submit. The flame of rebellion might, in this do so.

But what right has the Government at Ottawa to pledge the responsibility of the Dominion for our entire canal system, in the Exmouth street Church last evening, and a large number of bows, aprons, flowers and beaux were sold. The sne-cess was so great that the managers decided to reopen the Fair this evening, when it will conclude with an auction sale.

George Brittany was seriously injured by failing from the staging of his own force and incompetency, if not of more dangerous influences at work in the councils of the nation.

The flame of rebellion might, in this ral land and naval forces are said to be do so.

But what right has the Government at of arms until they are forced to submit.

The flame of rebellion might, in this case, spread to other States, and the conquest of the South be again necessary. If the third-term faction could get the country involved in a difficulty of this kind, or seriously threatened with it, the re-nomination of Grant would be certain.

The very remarkable views of, and the course being pursued by the Cabinet at Ottawa, in the matter of this treaty—the Pacific Railroad, the Tariff, the Chignecto canal, &c., and the apparent disregard of public opinion, would call in question even the loyalty of our men in power, were it possible that a British statesman could so far forget what he owes to his country as to banter it to a foreign power.

The economical instincts of the present Government are shown in various ways. The latest proof is the appointment of Mr. James Thompson, collector on the Ferry, as clerk of the Collector of the Collector of Collec Annexation is, however, the political on the Ferry, as clerk of the Collector of Inland Revenue in this city, the office having been created for him as a reward for his desertion of the party with which he had always voted and his support of the Minister of Customs. Mr. Thompson enters on the duties of the office—if there are any duties—next Monday. There was absolutely no necessity for the creation of the office, as the Collector has easily done all the as the Collector has easily done all the work while living out of town.
