Publisher wants $4,200

CYSF has yearbook troubles

By MIKE SAVAGE

Where is the York yearbook? The annual guessing game is on again. Council of the York Student Federation treasurer, Bill Brennan, says the publisher is refusing to print the yearbook until CYSF pays them $4,200.

Does CYSF owe the money to Winnipeg publisher National Student Yearbooks Ltd.? "They think we do, but we don't," Brennan said Monday. He said the matter is now in the hands of lawyers.

Brennan said the root of the problem lies in last year's hassle over the yearbook.

The editor of the yearbook last year was Ted Collis who was attending the University of Western Ontario. In a front-page story in EXCALIBUR last January Collis blamed the publisher for the delay in delivery, the publisher blamed Collis, and the result was just one big bureaucratic mess.

Brennan feels the bill of $4,200 belongs to Collis, but somehow the bill has been charged to CYSF. For one thing, Brennan said, Collis "never got permission from the student administrative council" to put out a yearbook. There was no central student government at that time.

Ira Goldhar, editor of the 1968-69 yearbook, would not comment on the situation. "I'd rather you clear it with Stuart Keeley (CYSF's vice-president)," he said. Keeley would not comment.

Tom Harrison, National Student Yearbooks' representative in Toronto, said Tuesday. "I'm not supposed to say anything about it right now." He said he didn't know what was happening.

It's "all rumors and conjecture" he said, but he felt that after talking to a few people including the yearbook editor, he would be able to make a statement.

Winter Carnival is off

By MEL LUBEK

There will not be a Winter Carnival at York this year.

Mostly for reasons of lack of support and administrative difficulties, the Winter Carnival planned for February by the Undergraduate Business Council has been put off until at least next year.

The carnival was to have encompassed a weekend of varied social and athletic events culminating in two concerts by a big name group such as Stephenwolf. The projected budget for the entire weekend was in the neighborhood of $20,000 plus.

Getting financial support was difficult, especially after Festival lost $7,000 at the end of October. Funds were sought from the various councils on campus: CYSF couldn't afford anything but they made the same arrangement as with Festival, to cover any loss above $1,000; Vanier turned them down flat; Winters supported the idea but had no available funds; both Founders and McLaughlin gave $2,000 apiece.

According to Keith Blackwell, a member of the UBC, Winter Carnival was intended both as a weekend to give us "the best calibre of social entertainment that York could afford" and to give the Undergraduate Business Council some practical experience and exercise.

Blackwell went on to suggest that one basic problem leading to Winter Carnival's demise was the lack of cooperation on the part of York's administration. He was specifically upset with Physical Plant "who seem to have more control of the university and its facilities than the people paying to go here."

Also centred out for blame was the Tait McKenzie Building staff for telling Winter Carnival not to advertise outside the university because they were afraid of vandalism at the very same time as the gym was having many non-York people attending high school basketball and other activities.

Regardless of whom you choose to blame, there will still be no Winter Carnival this year.

Deserters get $200

The Council of the York Student Federation Tuesday voted to give $200 to a Toronto committee aiding U.S. armed forces deserters.

Anne Ross, a Canadian with the American Deserters Committee, had asked for $400 to help provide emergency accommodation, counselling services and financial aid for deserters coming to the city.

She told the council that deserters are coming to Toronto at a rate of 100 per week during rush periods.

Often they do not bring all the required papers with which to seek landed immigrant status and must therefore remain unemployed for up to two months until they achieve such status.

The newly formed committee was set up to help them during this interim period, she said.

A deserter named Vince told the councillors of his experience at a San Diego marine base.

He said his platoon commander had just come back from Vietnam and was complaining that he hadn't killed anyone for two months — and he wanted to.

To satisfy his urge, the platoon commander attacked Vince and broke his arm.

Mrs. Ross says such violent tendencies are not uncommon among U.S. servicemen.

She says Vietnam veterans have told her that such incidents as the My Lai massacre are not infrequent. "It happens every day as a matter of policy," she said.

Radio York managerless

Vanier student Bob Wolfe resigned Thursday as Radio York's station manager after a policy dispute. Other staff, including former news director Kandy Biggs, also resigned. "I refuse to be associated with some of the directions this station is taking," Wolfe said Friday. He declined comment on the station's policy or its new "directions." Wolfe had planned to quit as station manager Feb. 10, after the election of a new manager. He will remain with the station as a disc jockey.
