
BIRDS OF PEASEMARSH

including Crows and Blackbirds and cats; and each society also pledged to make reports to their central branch, which in turn would report to the International Centre, a very great deal might be accomplished and some systematic record kept of the work for the birds and its results.

No bird could then decrease very rapidly in numbers without this being known at the centre of the bird protection work and prompt, far-reaching measures could be taken to prevent it from vanishing from the earth.
