

she gave is obviously not her own, not even, I judge, her maiden name." Lonesome Gove Sedgwick turned very white. "Do you mean that she is a married woman?" he demanded. "How could you have failed to see it?" returned the other gently. "A young girl of breeding and social experience would hardly have come to your studio. A married woman might who respected herself with full confidence and knew with the same confidence that you would respect her. And, my dear boy," added Kent, with his quiet winning smile, "you are a man to inspire confidence. Otherwise 1 myself might have suspected you of having a hand in the death of the woman on the beach."

"Never mind the woman on the ed of himself when he emergbeach. This other matter is more than ed upon his porch the mornlife or death. Is that flimsy supposi-The occasion of this query was a tion all you have to go on?"

"No. Her travel. Her wide ac man stretched flat on the lawn, with quaintance with men and events. Her his feet propped up comfortably against obvious poise. And, reverting to tanthe stone wall. His white serge suit gible fact, as clinching evidence, there was freshly pressed. A soft white hat covered his eyes against the sun glare, are her gloves, which she always To put a point to this foppishness, a wore.

"What about her gloves?"

depending from his lapel buttonhole, "You never saw her left hand, did His was a remarkable face, both in

"Oh, I see. You mean the wedding contour and in coloring. From chin ring. Well, 1 suppose," continued to cheek, the skin was white, with a Sedgwick, with a tinge of contempt in tint of blue showing beneath, but the his voice, "she could have taken off central parts of the face were bronzed. her ring as easily as her gloves."

The jaw was long, lean and bony. There was no answering contempt The cheek bones were high, the mouth in Chester Kent's voice as he replied: was large, fine cut and firm. the nose "But a ring, constantly worn and then removed, leaves an unmistakable mark, At the sound of a footstep the man What the connection between her and pushed his hat downward, revealing a the corpse on the beach may be is the knobby forehead and half closed eyes problem. My immediate business is to discover who the dead woman is." "And mine," said Sedgwick hoarse > ly. We'll at least start together,"

Twenty minutes of curving and dodging along the rocky roads in Kent's runabout brought them to the turnpike in sight of the town of Annalaka. "The inquest is set for 11 o'clock."

"All right," said Sedgwick with equal "And what can I do for you-before

They turned a corner and ran into the fringe of a crowd hovering about the town hall. Halting his machine a bit of shade. Kent surveyed the in gathering. At one point it thickened about a man who was talking eagerly, the vocal center of a small circle of silence.

the music now. One-word of warning: Don't lose your head or your temper eip lay out." The lobe of Kent's ear began to suf-"Nobody's had so much as a wink at it but those two and Ira Dennett. He viewed the corpse last night. That's why I guess your friend needs his friends and maybe a lawyer." "Exactly. Mr. Dennett doesn't seem to be precisely a deaf mute."

quaintance."

Sailor Smith faced him. "Didn't hardly know you with your beard off." piped the old man. "Howdy, professor? You're finickied up like "Good morning," said the scientist.

The ex-sailor started. "Him!" he exclaimed. "Here? There's been quite "Suspicion, you mean."

"What else can you expect?" returned the old man deprecatingly. "Iry Dennett's been tellin his story. He's certain the woman he seen talkin' to willin' to swear to it anywheres." "What about Gansett Jim? Has he sion?" "No. Jim's as close tongued as Iry ed Kent. "Well, I'll look for you inside.

gether they entered the building, while behind them a rising hum testified to the interest felt in them by the villagers.

Within a tall, wizened man with dead, fishy eyes stalked nervously to and fro on a platform, beside which a hastily constructed coffin with a hasped cover stood on three sawhorses. On a chair near by slouched the sheriff. his face red and streaming. A few perspiring men and women were scattered on the benches. Outside a clock struck 11. There was a quick inflow of the populace, and the man on the platform lifted up a chittering voice. "Feller citizens," he said, "as medical officer I declare these proceedings opened. Meaning no disrespect to the deceased, we want to get through as spry as possible. First we will hear witnesses. Anybody who thinks he can throw any light on this business can have a hearing. Then those as wants may view the remains. The burial will take place right afterward in the town buryin' ground, our feller citizen and sheriff, Mr. Len Schlager, having volunteered the expenses."

Didn't even have an undertaker to den, his eyes stiffened. A convulsive | cars. The next moment a titter ran shudder ran through his big body. He through the crowd as a bumpkin in a jammed the cover back, and, with finfer from repeated handling. "The body gers that actually drummed on the hasn't been identified. I suppose?" wood, forced the hasps into place.

"She's come to life!" cried a voice from the rear. "No, no!" rumbled the sheriff. Whirling upon the medical officer, he whis pered in his ear - not more than a single word, it seemed to the watchful The doctor turned ghastly. "Gents," he said in a quavering voice to the amazed crowd, "the program will not be carried out as arranged. The-the -well, the condition of the deceased not fitten"- He stopped, mopping his brow. Set A Kent's knuckle, as seen through the But Yankee curiosity was not soglass, stood forth, monstrous and diseasily to be balked of its food. It torted, every line of the bronzed skin showing like a furrow. found expression in Lawyer Bain.

The monocle was a powerful mag-"That ain't the law, doc," he said. nifying lens.) "I'm the law here," declared Sheriff The sheriff's heavy voice rose. "Any Schlager, planting himself solidly beone here present recognize or identify tween the crowd and the coffin. One hand crept slowly back toward his hip. the deceased?" he droned, and, with-"Don't pull any gun on me," retorted the lawyer quietly. "It ain't necessary.' "You heard Doc Breed say the body wasn't fitten to be viewed," pursued the sheriff. "That's all right too. But the doc hasn't got the final word. The law has. And the law says, that the body shall be duly viewed. Otherwise, and the deceased being buried without view, an order of the court to exhume may be obtained."

"Look at Breed," whispered Kent to Sedgwick.

The medical officer's lip's were gray as he leaned forward to pluck at the sheriff's arm. There was a whispered colloquy between them. Then Breed spoke, with a pitiful effort at self control:

"Lawyer Bain's point is correct, undoubtedly correct. But the body must be prepared. It ought to 'a' been looked to last night. But somehow 1 -we- Will six citizens kindly volunteer to fetch the coffin back to my house?"

Ten times six offered their services. The box was carried out swiftly, followed by the variable hum of excited conjecture. Quickly the room emptied itself except for a few stragglers.

Sedgwick, who had followed the impromptu cortege with his vision, was brought up sharply by the glare of a pair of eyes outside the nearest window. The eves were fixed on his own.

levolent. Without looking round, Sedgwick said in a low voice:

No answer came. "Kent!" said the artist a little louder. "Huh?" responded a muffled and ab-

"See here for a moment." Kent had leisurely risen in his place There was neither sound nor moveand made his statement. ment from the scientist.

"N-n-not drowned!" gasped the medi-"An Indian looking chap outside the cal man.

CHAPTER VIL

Simon P. Groot Does Business. TO one moved in the courtroom for appreciable seconds after that pronouncement

First to recover from the surprise was the sheriff. "You, Jim, set down!" he shouted. "If there's to be any accusin' done here, I'll do it."

"I do it," persisted the half breed. "Blood is on his han'. I see it." Involuntarily Sedgwick looked at his right hand. There was a low growl from the crowd.

"Steady!" came Kent's voice at his elbow. "Mistakes like that are Judge. Lynch's evidence."

"Whah was he the night of the killin'?" cried Gansett Jim. "Ast him. Whah was he?"

"Where was you if it comes to that?" retorted the sheriff and bit his lip with a scowl.

At that betrayal Chester Kent's eyelids flashed up and instantly drooped again into somberness.

"This hearing is adjourned," twit-tered the medical officer. "Burial of the unknown will take place at once. All are invited."

During their slow progress to the door Kent kept up a running comment, which Sedgwick supported with equal coolness. The crowd, darkling and undecided, pressed around them. As they went through the doorway they were jostled by a sudden pressure, following which Kent felt a touch on his shoulder. He turned to face the sheriff.

"Better get out of town quick," advised Schlager in a half whisper. "Thank you." said Kent in a clear and cheerful voice. "Where can I get some tobacco?" "Sterrett's grocery keeps the best." said some informant back of him. "End of the square to the right."

"Much obliged," said Kent and strolled leisurely to his car, followed by Sedgwick. As they took their seats and started slowly through the crowd Sedgwick inquired earnestly:

"Do you crave tobacco at this particular moment worse than you do the peace and Toneliness of the green ields?"

"Policy, my young friend," retorted Kent. "I wish I could think up a dozen more errands to do. The more casually we get out of town the less likely we are to be followed by a flight of rocks. I don't want a perfectly good runabout spoiled by a mob."

Both of them went in Sterrett's store. where Kent earned the reputation from Sterrett of being "awful dang choosy about what he gets," and came out into a considerable part of the populace, which had followed. As they re-embarked the sheriff put his foot on the running board.

"The deceased was not drowned." "Better take my tip," he said sig-Emerging from his reverie. Chester nificantly.

"Very well," returned Kent. "There will be no arrest, theu?" "Not just now." A peculiar smile slid sidewise off a corner of the scientist's long juw.

'Nor at any other time," he concluded.

"Already?" 'Already! Do you know it's 10.

in which there was a touch of som-"Good morning." said the artist. and "to discover the living." then all but recoiled from the voice that replied, so harsh and raucous it plied Kent. "Come!"

"I hear your opinion on it," retorted Sedgwick, a bit nettled. "Am I to infer that you have been waiting for said Kent.

taciturnity.

"Elder Dennett," said Kent, "back from Cadystown. You'll have to face if the suspicion raised against you by Dennett is strengthened by me. My Lawyer Bain emitted the bubbling chuckle of the fat throated. "It's quite some time since Iry won any prizes for silent thought," he stated. 'You are known hereabouts?" he added after a pause.

"Very little." "Gansett Jim, yonder, looks as if he kinder cherished the honor of your ac-Over his shoulder Kent caught the half breed's glance fixed upon him with stolid intensity. A touch on his arm made him turn to the other side, where your own weddin'."

"Are you going inside? Sit with us. won't you? Mr. Sedgwick is with me."

a lot o' talk"-

"We-ll, yes." "People are inclined to connect Mr. Sedewick with the death of the woman."

Mr. Sedgwick is the dead woman-contributed anything to the discus-

is clatter mouthed."

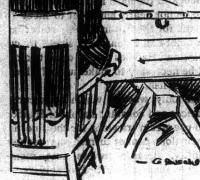

"And probably with reason," mutter-

He returned to join Sedgwick. To-

Their expression was distinctly ma-"Kent!"

stracted voice behind him.

gone!"

rear seat called out:

"The dude's eyes ain't mates!"

Chester Kent, already conspicuous in his spotless white flannels had made himself doubly so by drawing out a monocle and deftly fixing it in his right eye. He leaned over the body to look into the face, and his head jerked back the merest trifle.

Bending lower, he scrutinized the un-manacled wrist. When he passed on his lips were pursed in the manner of

He resumed his seat beside Sedgwick. Chancing to look down at the monocle. Sedgwick started and stared.

one who whistles noiselessly.

"Dah de murderer!"

out waiting for a reply, set the lid in place and signaled to the medical officer.

"Feller citizens," began the still shaking physician, "we don't need any jury to find that this unknown drowned woman"- o'clock? However, it's a good story." "Thank you."

The Secret

Samuel Hopkins Adams

Copyright, 1912, by the Bobbs-Merrill

Company

CHAPTER V.

An Inquiry.

narrow silken ribbon, also pure white,

ested an eyeglass in his pocket.

ing after Kent's visit.

solid, set like a rock.

berness, of brooding.

me?'

cantly.

"You rise late," it said.

"You wouldn't go far wrong."

you leave?" said Sedgwick signifi-

"Take a little walk with me present-

"Well, you appear surprised. What kind of artist are you not to recognize a man simply because he shaves his beard and affects a false voice. I've ly," said the man in another voice, brushing the hat clear of his face.

"Kent!" exclaimed the artist.

M I running a Strangers' Rest

here?" Francis Sedgwick ask-concern is to get to the bottom of this "As a story. As information, it points."

"Thank you again."

read your story."

ED

o of

by

nla

the

by

N.

iges ith.

ore

ood

' to

. B.

trappings of the horse?"

"I didn't notice particularly. Black, I think; yes, certainly black. Rather a large horse. That's all I can tell you.

"Humph! Color, size and trappings truth." of the rider?"

"Reddish brown hair with a gloss like a butterfly's wing," said the artist, with enthusiasm; "deep hazel eyes, clear sun browned skin, tall-I should say quite tall-but so-so feminine that you wouldn't realize her tallness. She was dressed in a light brown riding costume, with a toque hat, very simple, tan gauntlets and tan boots-that is, the first time I saw her. The next time"

"Hold on; a dressmaker's catalogue is no good to me! I couldn't rem ber it all. Was she in riding clothes on any of her later visits?"

"Any scars or marks?"

"Certainly not!"

"That's a pity, although you seem to think otherwise. Age?"

"We-ell, twenty perhaps." 'Add five. 'Say twenty-five."

"What for?" demanded Sedgwick indignantly.

"I'm allowing for the discount of romance. Did you notice her boots?" "Not particularly, except that she was always spick and span from head to foot'

"Humph! Was it pretty warm the last week she called on you?"

"Piping!" "Did she show it?"

"Never a bit. Always looked fresh s a flewer."

"Then, although she came far, she didn't walk far to get here. There's a road back of the hill yonder and a little copse in an open field where a motorcar has stood. I should say thatshe had driven herself there and come across the hill to you."

"Could we track the car?" asked edgwick eagerly.

"No farther than the main road. What is the latest she ever left here when she arrived afoot?" "On ce she stayed till half past 6.

egged her to stay and dine, but she

Adv. in the Beacon For Results

matter. There is something the sherleaves out most of the important iff knows that I don't know. Probably it is the identity of the body. To force him into the open it may be necessary "You're welcome. Color, size and for me to augment the case against you.'

"Ought I to be ready for arrest?" "Hardly probable at present. No; go on the stand when you're called and tell the truth and nothing but the

"But not the whole truth?" "Nothing of the necklace. You won't be questioned about that. By the way, you have never kept among your artistic properties anything in the way of handcuffs, have you?"

"No." "I didn't suppose you had. Those manacles are a sticker. I don't-1 ab-And on one wrist only! Perhaps that shall know more 'when we're older; hours older, say. Whether we two shall know all that Mr. Sheriff Len Schlager knows is another question. 1 don't like Mr. Schlager, either, for that matter.' "Dennett has seen me," said Sedgwick in a low voice.

Indeed, the narrator's voice had abruptly ceased and he stood with the dropped jaw of stupefaction. One after another of his auditors turned and stared at the two men in the motor-

"Stay where you are," said Kent and stepped out to mingle with the crowd. No one recognized at first the immaculate flannel clad man as the bearded scientist whose strange actions had amused the crowd on the beach. A heavy, solemn man addressed him: "Friend of his?" he asked, nodding toward the artist.

"Yes. "He'll need 'em. Going to give evidence?"

"To hear it, rather," replied Kent pleasantly. "Where's the body?"

"Inside. Just broought it over from Dr. Breed's. He's the medical officer, and he and the sheriff are running the show. Your friend wants a lawyer.

maybe?" The thought struck Kent that, while a lawyer might be premature, a friend in the town might be very useful.

'Yes," he said; "from tomorrow on." "Meanin' that you're' in .charge today," surmised the big man shrewdly.

Kent smiled: "I dare say we shall get on very well together, Mr."- His voice went up interrogatively. "Bain, Adam Bain, attorney and counselor at law for thirty years in the town of Annalaka."

"Thank you. My name is Kent. You already know my friend's name. What kind of man is this medical officer?" "Breed? Not much. More of a polltician than a doctor and more of a ler than either. Fidgety as a -"Did be

CHAPTER VI.

"Dah de murderer!"

HE first witness, a sheep herder. rose in his place and, without the formality of an oath, told of sighting the body at the edge/ of the surf at 7 o'clock in the morning. Others, following, testified to the position on the beach, the lashing of the body to the grating, the wounds and the manacles. Dr. Breed announced solutely do not like those manacles. briefly that the deceased had come to her death by drowning and that the is the very fact, though. Well, we skull had been crushed in, presumably. when the waves hammered the body upon the reefs.

"Then the corpse must have come from a good ways out," said Sailor Smith, "for the reefs wouldn't catch it at that tide."

"Nobody knows how the dead come to Lonesome Cove," said the sheriff in his deep voice.

Elder Ira Dennett was the next and last witness called. Somewhere beneath the elder's dry exterior lurked the instinct of the drama. Stalking to the platform, he told his story with skill and fervor. He made a telling point of the newly finished picture he had seen in Sedgwick's studio, depicting the moonlit charge of the wave mounted corpse. He sketched out the encounter between the artist and the dead woman vividly. Then Sedgwick rose. He was white. but his voice was under perfect control as he said: "It is all true. But I do not know the woman who accosted me. I never saw her before that evening. She spoke strangely to me and indicated that she was to meet some one and go aboard ship, though I saw no sign of a ship." "You couldn't see much of the ocean from your house." said the medical officer

"I walked on the cliffs later," said Sedgwick, and a murmur went through the courtroom, "but I never found the woman. And as for throwing her out of a ship, or any such fantastic nonsense, I can prove that I was back in my house by a little after 9 o'clock that night."

He sat down coolly enough, but his eyes dilated when Kent whispered: "Keep your nerve. The probability will be shown that she was killed be fore 10 o'clock." Now. however, Dr. Breed was on his feet again. "Form in line, ladles and gentlemen," said he, "and pass the coffin as spry as possible." At this Sheriff Schlager stepped forward and loosened the hasps preparatory to removing the cover. "The ndow is trying to hypnotize something of the sort."

This information, deemed by its giv er to be of no small interest, elicited not the faintest response. Somewhat niqued, the artist turned, to behold his friend stretched on a bench, with face to the ceiling, eyes closed and on.' heels on the raised end. His lips moved faintly in a whistle. Sedgwick that grating." shook the whistler insistently.

"Eh? What?" cried Kent, wrench-"How do you figure that?" called a ing his shoulder free. "Go away! voice. "On the under side of the grating I Can't you see I'm busy?"

"I'll give you something to think found a cocoon of, a common moth. about. Look at this face of a cigar Half an hour in the water would have soaked the cocoon through and killed store Indian at the window. No! It's the insect inhabitant. The insect was alive." "Gansett Jim, probably," opined Kent. "Just where his interest in this case comes in I haven't yet found out. mark on the beach. It was an old He favored me with his regard outhalf rotted affair such as no ship side. And he had some dealings with would carry. Ask Sailor Smith." the sheriff on the beach. But I don't want to talk about him now nor about with conviction. anything else." Acting on this hint. Sedgwick let his companion severely alone until a busa full grown human body?" tle from without warned him that the crowd was returning. Being aroused, Kent accusted one of the villagers who say it'd just barely float it, maybe." had just entered.

"Body coming back?" he asked. "Yep. On its way now."

"What occurred in the house where they took it?" ed, and handcuffs weigh something.'

"Search me! Everybody was shut said Kent calmly. out by the sheriff and the doc. They had that body to theirselves nigh twenty minutes." loose on the beach and washed away,"

At this moment the sheriff entered the hall, followed by Dr. Breed, who escorted the coffin to its supporting sawhorses. The meager physician was visibly at the fag end of his self control. Even the burly sheriff looked like a sick man as he lifted aside the offin lid and spoke.

"There was reasons, neighbors." said who came to death by drowning?" e, "why the corpse wasn't suitable to be looked at. Nobody had seen it since ast night. We've fixed it up as good as we could, and you'll now please and spread in the room. The sheriff pass by as quick as possible."

silenced it with a stentorian voice. In the line that formed Kent got a "What are you trying to get at?" he demanded, facing Kent. place behind Elder Dennett, who had "The truth. What are you?" lecided to take another look for good Schlager's eyelids flickered, but he measure, as he said. The look was a productive one. No sooner had it fall-en on the face of the dead than Dengnored the counterstroke. "Look out t don't lead you where you won't want nett jabbed an indicatory finger in that to follow." he returned. with a signififirection and addressed the sheriff: cant look at Sedgwick. "This is as far as it has led me."

"Hey, Len! What's this?" said Kent in his clear, even voice. "The "What's what?" growled Schlager. "Why, there's a cut on the lady's right cheek. It wasn't there when I seen the corpse last night." "Ah, what's the matter with your eves?" demanded the sheriff savagely.

You want to hog the limelight, that's your trouble!"

This was evidently a shrewd lash at a recognized weakness, and the elder moved on amid jeering comments. But Sedgwick, whose eyes had been dxed upon Kent, saw a curious expres-tion, flicker and fade across the long fawed face. It was exactly the ex-hody has been left." said he, slipping lawed face. It was exactly the ex-the iid aside, "just as"- Of a sud- pression of a dog that pricks up its

"Certainly not! As you must know, if you made an autonsy." 'No autopsy was necessary," replied the other quickly. "There's plenty of "How'd the grating get there, then?"

"Dragged down from the high water

"Exactly, but plus several pounds of "The clothes would have been soak-

"There might have been extra spars under the grating that got pounded propounded the medical officer des

Others took up the cry. Clamor rose clothing and some dead metal extra?"

"No."

perately.

'He's right."

He threw in the clutch. When the car had won the open road beyond the testimony without that. We've heard village Sedgwick remarked: the witnesses that saw the drowned "Queer line the sheriff is taking." body on the grating it washed ashore "Poor Schlager!" said Kent, chuck-

"The body never washed ashore on ling. "No other line is open to him. He's in a tight place. But it isn't the sheriff that's worrying me." A murmur ran through the crowd.

"Who, then?" "Gansett Jim."

"What did the sheriff mean by asking Gansett Jim where he was the night of the murder?"

"Murder?" said Kent quizzically. What murder?"

"The murder of the unknown woman, of course. I think that Gausets Jim killed her and is trying to turn suspicion on me." "Humph!"

"But if the sheriff knows where Gansett Jim was at the time of the "That's true," said the old seaman, killing, he can't suppose me guilty. I wonder if he really does believe me "You're an expert, Mr. Smith. Now, guilty ?" was that grating large enough to float

"If he does, he doesn't care. His concern is quite apart from your guilt." "Why, as to that, a body ain't but a "It's too much for me," conferred mite heavier than the water. I should the artist.

> "And for me. That is why I am going back to the -village."

"But I thought you were fright ened."

"If I stayed away from everything that alarms me," said Kent., "I'd never have a tooth filled or speak to a woman under seventy. I'm a timid soul, Sedgwick, but I don't think I shall be in any danger in Annalaka so long as I'm alone. Here we are. Out with you! I'll be back by evening." "Look at the face," said Kent, with To his surprise, Kent, turning into finality. "This is a bad coast. Most the village square. found the crowd of you have seen drowned bodies. Did still lingering. A new focus of inany one ever see an expression of such terest had drawn it to a spot opposite terror and agony on the face of one Sterrett's store, where a wagon, decorated in the most advanced style of "No, by thunder!" shouted somebody. circus art, shone brilliant in yellow and green. Bright red letters across the front présented to public admiration the legend:

SIMON P. GROOT SIMON PURE GOODS

A stout projection rested on one of the rear wheels. Here stood the proprietor of the vehicle, while behind him in a window were displayed his wares. It was evident that Simon R. Groot followed the romantic career of an itinerant hawker. dealing in that wide, range of commodities roughly comprised in the quaint term, "Yan-kee notions." Kent was struck with the expansive splendor of the man's sestures, the dignity of his robust figure and the beauty of a broad whitening beard that spread sidewise like the ripples from a boat's stem. Two blemishes unbappily marred the majesty of Simon P. Groot's presence a pair of pinhead eyes, mutually a racted to each other, and a mean an stringent little voice.

Minard's Liniment Cures Colds. Etc.

body, already dead, was dragged down and soaked in the sea and then lashed to the grating by a man who probably is or has been a sailor." "Then the deceased met death on shore, and presumably by violence," said Lawyer Bain. "It's murder!" cried a woman shrilly. "Bloody murder! That's what it is!

"Murder!" echoed a voice from the doorway. Gansett Jim, his half India half negro face alight with fury, sto there pointing with stiffened hand at Sedgwick. "Dah de murderer!"