VARICOSE VEINS CURED

NO NAMES USED WITHOUT WRITTEN CONSENT. Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the veins would become sore and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out that they wanted my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was not well, so I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Dr. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had been treated from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. I wrote them and got the New Method Treatment. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months I was well and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $31 and never lose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment."

Those Papers

The Plan by Which They Were Carried From London to New York

By STEPHEN TROWBRIDGE

One morning while in London on taking up my newspaper after breakfast to scan the news my eye fell on a personal which read as follows:

Wanted.—One versed in smuggling devices to carry valuable papers. Now, if there was any man who could beat me in methods to pull the wool over customs officers I would have been pleased to meet him.

I had begun my labors by working the hollow boot heel racket; then I had a lot of diamonds fixed up in cherries to ornament a woman's hat and hired a passenger on the ship going over with me to wear it. She got through all right, but came down on me for all the profit or she would peach. I made some money by having the tiny works of a lady's watch put in a chronometer, the space around the wheels and pivots being filled with valuable jewels. A wax tumor on the top of my head was cut open by a butcherly customs man and disclosed a big diamond, the profit on which would have been $20,000. The diamond and the profit both went by the board. Passing over the Swiss line into France, I had a bouquet in which there was $10,000 worth of Geneva watch works. A lady confederate carried it safely over for me, and she didn't bleed me either, for she didn't know she carried anything but flowers.

It occurred to me to get on my feet again by securing, if possible, this advertised job; but, though I knew ways and means, I was the best known man in the business to the customs men, and that would make me the worst man to successfully carry valuable papers, for it was evident that the owner wished to get them through secretly, and all my luggage would be turned inside out for smuggled goods. Besides, the papers might be bulky, and that would make them hard to get through. They couldn't be wound

"I WAS GIVEN THE PAPERS IN HIS OFFICE" around the body like lace, and they couldn't be carried in a false wart on the nose.

I spent a whole day trying to think up a plan to get these papers through, providing for dangers similar to those to be met in a custom house, but failed. At 4 o'clock the next morning I awoke and lay in bed thinking. My brain always works better at that time than any other. I worked out a scheme which I consider the crowning device of my life.

By 9 o'clock I had mailed a reply to the ad., and the next morning's post brought me a reply. I was invited to call at the office of a prominent firm of solicitors. I went to the address at once and was introduced into the private office of the head of the firm, Mr. Edward Collamore.

"Now, sir," he said to me, "I am ready to listen to your story for the work of carrying some legal documents to New York, of which any ordinary messenger would be robbed on the way, if not murdered as well."

I gave him a history of my work in deceiving customs officers. He was quite pleased at some of my devices, especially the carrying of watchworks in a bouquet, and asked me if papers could not be carried in that way. I told him that depended on the person or persons who would try to get possession of them. He was sufficiently impressed with my accomplishments to tell me all about the work he needed done.

Viscount B., one of his clients, had married an American heiress owning an immense property in New York. There were other persons—the countess' half brothers and sister—who were interested. She had recently died, and her husband was having a big fight with these persons for the property. His case hinged on certain papers which were in London and must be transmitted to the surrogate's office in New York. Unscrupulous attorneys were acting for the American parties, who knew of these papers and that if they could get possession of them some $10,000,000 would pass to their clients. "Now," said Mr. Collamore, "can you transmit the papers safely? If you can you will be paid

10 per cent of the viscount's inheritance."

"How do you know that I will not turn them over to the New York parties for twice that?"

"I have a plan for preventing your doing so."

"Your plan would fail. However, I can give you a scheme of operations by which you can work with me. I shall need a confederate. You may name that confederate."

"Proceed."

"I shall require a few carpenter's tools, which I shall take with me on the ship, and a tiny pot of paint. I suppose from what you have told me that the moment the papers leave you vaults the enemy will know it."

"I have been told that we have spies here in this office and the best London detectives are watching us."

"Very well, send the papers to the ship in any way you like and deliver them to me in my stateroom, which you will engage for me. As soon as you have secured it cable some one you know in New York to engage it for the return trip. This done, we shall proceed further."

"I will attend to the matter at once. How about your confederate?"

"He may go with me on the trip and will take the papers from me in New York."

"But I don't understand the necessity for these details."

"They are more necessary on my account than on yours. A long experience enables me to get these papers through for you, but that experience makes me a suspicious character. I shall be searched by the customs officers in New York. But there is this advantage in your employing me. Likely your opponents will get on to the fact of my taking the papers to America. If they don't I prefer that you should see that they do. This will concentrate suspicion on me."

"And insure failure." It took some time to convince Mr. Collamore of the expediency of employing me. In fact, I was obliged to give him my whole scheme before he would do so. When I told him all he engaged me at once.

I was given the papers in his office and went direct to the ship, watched by several detectives, who remained on the dock till the ship had sailed. Once in my stateroom I took my carpenter's tools from a satchel, loosened a board in the floor, put in the papers and, putting back the board, dabbed a little paint on it, so that its removal would not be noticed. To make more sure I removed the board under the berth.

I was conscious of being watched all the way over, but I did not know whether my watchers were in the service of the London or the New York parties interested in the papers. One man, a middle aged gentleman, I suspected of being my confederate, who was not to make himself known to me, but I was not sure. It didn't matter to me how closely I was watched, for as soon as I had concealed the papers under the floor of my stateroom my work was done. When we arrived at New York and I went ashore I was accosted by a customs man who knew me well by:

"Hello, Bob! What racket are you working on this time?"

He took me and my baggage into a private room and went through everything. He found nothing dutiable, not even my carpenter's tools, for I had thrown them overboard. Finding nothing, he let me go. I had not got a block from the dock before I was attacked by a gang of roughs, one of whom, doubtless disguised, searched me. A policeman picked me up half dead, put me in a cab and sent me home.

My confederate had received full instructions from Mr. Collamore. A couple of hours before the ship sailed the former went aboard the ship, accompanied by one who purported to be his daughter, but who was really a typist in the employ of a legal firm who were Mr. Collamore's correspondents. The confederate, having obtained the key to his stateroom—the one I had occupied on the last trip from England—went there and, with tools he carried in his suit case, took up the board in the floor, secured the papers, the typist concealed them on her person and, when the "All ashore!" bell was rung, bidding a tearful goodbye to him who purported to be her father, she went down the gangplank, and in another hour the papers were deposited in the vaults of a safety deposit company.

According to the contract I had made before leaving London, I was given $200 a month till the estate was settled, when I was to receive a million. I was paid the $200 regularly, but when the final settlement was made I was put off with a beggarly half million on the ground that after all the viscount had been obliged to compromise with the American heirs.

However, I am quite comfortable and do not need to practice any more schemes, for I can get on very well from the income I enjoy from the proceeds of my last venture. I live in London and am much respected, though I am known to be a retired smuggler. You see, of late years smuggling has become fashionable. The wives of American millionaires do the principal part of what is done in that line and do it on the other side of the big pond. As for the English, they so dislike our protection system that any man who can beat an American customs officer is popular among them. But I'm getting tired of London. I'm thinking of going to Ireland. The pride of family is going out in England, and there is no country where it is still held in respect except among the older families of the Emerald Isle. If that rascally viscount hadn't beaten me out of a part of my pay for getting his bloomin' papers through I could have set up a racing stable in Ireland.
