in the world to a biologist than New Zealand, and to Professor Dendy is due the credit of having made some very valuable original researches in Nearly every one has heard of the tuatara, the curious, iguanalike looking creature now found on only one or two islands off the coast of New Zealand and supposed to be the oldest living type of animal on the face of the globe. One of the most curious features is an organ on the head which at one time was spoken of as the pineal gland, but which Dr. Dendy discovered to be in reality a third eye.

His paper on the subject caused the greatest interest in scientific circles, and, as an illustration of the way in which research is specialized nowadays, it may be mentioned that while

Dr. Dendy devoted himself to the study of the third eye one distinguished English biologist is "working out" the skeleton, another the kidneys, etc.

More recently Dr. Dendy has discovered another New Zealand creature possessing a third eye. This is the New Zealand lamprey, a favorite article of food among the Maoris. The third eye is situated right on top of the head and is covered with a thin coating of skin. It is doubtful whether it is now of any practical use for seeing, but Dr.

Dendy believes that at one time, far back in the world's history, there were two eyes on the back of the lamprey's head. He is further of the opinion that at one time the tuatara also had two eyes where now only one remains. In secret of success. His discovery comes five years past the supply of lobsters has been decreasing. The method of Professor Bumpus depends upon keeping the water in which the lobster fry are placed after hatching in constant motion, for, if allowed to settle, the fry smother or devour one another. By this device the young lobsters are successfully reared until at the age of

PILGRIM JOE'S LUCK

HE REACHES RED HOT AND MAKES THINGS LIVELY.

After Doing a Very Profitable Business In Tintypes the Pilgrim Accepts a Challenge and Wins a Big Pot of Money.

[Copyright, 1902, by C. B. Lewis.] N the outskirts of the thrivin' and festive town of Red Hot I was met by the mayor on hossback, and as he bid me welcome he added:

"He who hath integrity hath all the "Truth may be crushed to earth occasionally," says I, "but you can't keep her on the grass long." "Virtue is a beacon fire set on a high hill," says he.

"And the man without guile sleepeth like a babe and fears no evil," says I. Then he slaps me on the back and calls me an old cuss, and we sought out the nearest place of exhilaration and exhilarated on sarsaparilla. When it became known to the citizens of Red Hot that I was takin' tintypes at 10 cents a take, they sat down before me in dozens and scores, and I had a rush of business for three days. Among the last to appear was a woman who was strivin' to forget that her busband

I WAS MET BY THE MAYOR ON HOSSBACK. had been assisted to die four weeks previously by a band of enterprisin' citizens. He was found with the goods on him-that is, he was still-ridin' the stolen hoss. She was a woman with a double chin, and her weight was 200 pounds. As she sat for her tintyne her eyes rolled, her bosom heaved, and she sighed with an energy that humped up her shoulders. I tried to dodge it, but I was too late.

"Hast thou no one to love thee?" she the tuatara it is the left eye which has liquidly inquired as she raised her survived, while in the lamprey it is the azure orbs to mine.

"Nay," I said, "and I do not wish to The English lamprey has only two be loved. Let me have the respect of the world for my integrity, and I am its New Zealand congener, but it has content."

its compensations, for was it not re-"To such a man as thee I could cling corded in our history books at school as the tender vine clings to the sturdy that an English king died from eating oak." too many lampreys?-Melbourne (Aus-

"But I am not in the sturdy oak business. My mission is to comfort the sorrerful, cheer the discouraged and lift up the fallen. As a sort of side issue I run a tintype outfit, keep a fightin' dog and enter my old hoss in half mile races."

"But your benign countenance and fatherly tenderness have captured my heart," she insists. And she rises up and throws herself into my arms and bids me take her and be happy.

I dodged, and she fell to earth and rolled over, and when she arose she was a woman scorned. Her love for me had fled away, and my venerable whiskers would have been in her grasp hod I not spread my wings and soared away. She demanded the sum of $2 for her blighted affections, and rather than have her tip over my wagon and characterize me as a man with a heart of stone I paid it, and she retired with the light of triumph in her eyes. I was sayin' to myself that a clear conscience needed no lantern on a dark night when a sinful lookin' critter with the lust of avarice on his countenance came along and looked at my dog and "I have a canine myself, and occasionally, that his heart may be made joyous, I turn him loose." "It is thus also with me," I says, "but I am allus ready to back up his joyous-ness with a ten dollar bill." "I have long looked for thee, I will also back the joyousness of my canine, and we will bring the two together and let them disport. On second thought let's say $20,"

"I seek not riches." says I as I turns my head away, "but humility must be fed and clothed as well as luxury. I'll therefore raise the ante and call it an even $25."

At which the man with the sintul countenance was greatly rejoiced and went away to prepare for business. That afternoon on the public square and in the presence of an interested populace the canines were brought together and allowed to disport. The humble and peaceful demeanor of my dog while waitin' for the conflict to be gin caused many eminent citizens to bet ag'in him to the extent of $5, and it is needless to remark that I calmly and without undue estentation kivered their money. The disportin' lasted about a quarter of an hour, and there was no uncertainness about the other dog bein' licked. His ambition was checked and his pride laid low, and when I counted up I found myself $85 ahead of the game. Thus doth integrity reward itself and virtue stand forth triumphant. I was feelin' that balminess of feelin' that allus sets in after a men has come out on top and makin' my preparations to leave Red Hot and lourney toward Paradise Valley, when there came another man to detain me. At first I took him for a feller pilgrim whiskers there was a venerableness that made me bow down in respect. "He who hath not integrity hath nothing," says the old man as he sits down beside me.

"And he who hath humility hath heap." says I in my modest way. "A little sorrer is sometimes given to man that he may be strengthened," says he as he winks at the hind wheels of my wagon.

"And he who hath never mourned cannot fitly rejoice," says I as I purtends to wipe a tear from my eye. Our emotions kept us silent for a minit or two, and then the venerable but deceivin' old critter turns on me and says:

"Pilgrim, is that old hoss of yours on the amble?" "He can do a purty fair amble for half a mile with me on his back."

"For how much cash?"

Ag'in the populace of Red Hot turned out in their enthusiasm, and ag'in there was a number of them who erred in judgment when they sized my old hoss up for a stationary engine. It was only when I had climbed up on his back and we had got the word to go that he stretched out a pair of hind legs which seemed to be 'leven feet long and tore up the sile like a plow run by steam. I jumped him seventeen feet at every yell, and the dun colored hoss of him who would have robbed me was left ten rods behind at the wire. I gathered in my stakes, feelin' that honesty was like a full house in a game of poker, and when the venerable old man would have made the people believe that I had fastened stilts to the legs of my hoss he found no one to sorrer with him. As the settin' sun got ready to set and the lark was callin' to his mate I climbed on to my wagon and pursued my way. There was boodle in my pockets and a calm heart, and while the hoss flies took a last bite and the dew descended to moisten my whiskers

THROWING THE LASSO.

The Manner in Which the Rope Is Handled by an Expert. "A mistaken impression prevails in the mind of the public in regard to the manner in which a lasso is handled,' says an expert. "The idea that the loop is always swung around the head be fore making a cast, especially when the roper is on foot, is erroneous. No man of experience ever makes a cast in this fashion from the ground in practical work. There are several reasons why he does not. One of them is that the movement is likely to frighten the stock, especially horses; another that he may have to wait some min utes before a favorable opportunity occurs for making a cast. He knows that better results are obtained by holding the rope as unobtrusively as possible, even keeping it concealed from the object of capture.

"On the contrary, however, when mounted and in pursuit it is absolutely necessary to swing the loop over and around the head, for the cast must be made with the greatest possible force in order to overcome not only the forward movement of the pursued, but also the action of the wind should that chance to be against you.

"As to the manner of casting, some ropers' cast with a quick, jerky movement of the hand, seeming to use the arm very little and the body not at all. Others employ body, arm and hand, Both methods are effective when perfected by practice."

Board With the Butler. To avoid the trouble of housekeeping, many wealthy Parisians board with their butler, so to speak. Instead of ordering the food for the household from day to day, they pay a fixed sum per month to their butler or housekeeper, who contracts to supply them with the usual three meals per day, composed of the customary courses, says What to Eat. The price paid for this service varies in accordance with the style of living. If guests be invited to dinner or any sort of entertainment be given, an extra sum per head is paid. In this way the lady of the house avoids the annoyance of butchers' and bakers' bills, and if the butler does not keep his part of the contract it is easy enough to find another to replace him. Of course, the president's household is carried out on this plan on a large scale, and many of the big stores supply all their employees with daily meals in the same manner. The banks and other administrations of similar nature often furnish the noonday meal to their clerks by contract, the latter paying a trifling sum toward the cost. The Manufacture of Pins.

In 1775 a prize was given to the colonist of Carolina who produced the first native pins and needles. During the war of 1812, when, owing to restrictions upon commerce, the price of pins rose to the enormous sum of $1 per paper, the manufacture was actually started in the United States, but does not seem to have met with success, as the enterprise was soon abandoned. The industry was not fairly started in this country until the year 1836.

The early pins in this country, as in England, were made with globular heads of fine twisted wire, made separately, and secured to the shank by compression from a falling block and die. These old pins had the misfortune of often parting with their heads. It was to overcome this difficulty that the attention of early inventors was directed. The solid headed pin, in common use today, took the place of the old form about 1840.

"Have you known what it is to be an orphan?" asks one of the characters in the "Pirates of Penzance," and another replies, "Often." The similarity between the two words causes almost a page of good Gilbertian fun. It would have been otherwise if either of the characters had happened to be an average London boy. The tale is told of a London boy on his country holiday who was asked by a carter to hold one of his horses. "Which 'orse?" asked the lad. "The off 'un," said the driver. "Horphan," said the boy. "How d'ye think Hi knows which of 'em's a horphan? Garn, you don't kid me." And that closed the incident.
