CHAPTER XX.

Over the Toast and Tea.

'Let me help you,' said Miss Ethel, springing up; but the old lady pushed her gently aside.
'No, my dear; keep him here till I come back; I shan't be a moment.' And she bustled out.
Ethel walked to the window and looked out for a moment, then sat down and drew a little basket of needlework toward her, and got out her needle and thread, as quietly and naturally as if she were alone.
Harold leaned back and watched her in silence—a silence that he was afraid to break, lest he should spoil the exquisite little picture she made. So they sat for a moment; and, after all, she was the first to speak.
'How very pretty it is about here!' she said, raising her eyes for a moment.
'Yes,' said Harold. 'Prettiest part of the county. You have not been here very long—have you?'
She shook her head.
'No; little more than a week.'
'And you like it?' he asked.
'The county—the place, do you mean?'
'The—yes, and the life generally! It is very quiet. Don't you find it dull?'
She smiled.
'Not dull, certainly. Oh, no! I like quiet. I am very happy—happier than I have ever been before in my life,' she said, frankly. 'It might seem dull to another, but not to me.'
Harold looked at her curiously.
'Forgive me,' he said. 'I don't want to be impertinent, but don't you think that such a gift as yours, such talent, is rather thrown away in this remote corner of the world?'
She looked up and laughed, a laugh that rang like subdued music through the little room.
'Is that a compliment?' she said lightly. 'No, I don't think I have any gift to waste.'
'Remember,' he said, shaking his head, 'I have heard you play and sing.'
'Oh, that!' she said. 'You mean my playing? No, certainly, I don't think it is wasted. I didn't know what you meant.' And she laughed again.
'Oh, but come,' said Harold; 'I'm a musician, but I know one when I hear him or her, and I am sure you play splendidly. How you must startle the good, simple people!'
'I don't know about startling them, she said, 'but I do know they are good, and very, very kind.' And a warm glow came over her face, and made it positively lovely. 'I had always heard that the English people were good-hearted, but—'
'But you are English!' exclaimed Harold, apologetically.
'I'm afraid you think it very rude and ungrateful—'
'No, no,' he said, quickly and gravely. 'But it is quite wise to shut yourself up with an old woman, even such a dear, old soul as nurse? You are too young to live such a dull life.'
'But I am not dull,' she said, with a low, musical laugh. 'I am never dull, and I am quite happy. Isn't there a proverb that says, "It is wise to leave well enough alone?"'
'There is, but, like most proverbs, it is open to improvement. I should add, in your case, "Try and make well—better!" Are you still determined? Well, I shall leave it to Lillian's persuasive eloquence.'
She looked up quickly, with a sudden tremble in her soft eyes that surprised and startled him.
'Please do not,' she said. 'I would rather that Miss Woodleigh did not call. I—I suppose that I—how can I express myself without seeming "horribly rude"?'
'Don't say another word,' said Harold, quietly. 'I don't understand the reason for your desire for exclusion, but I can respect that desire, all the same, and with a smile, he rose.
She stretched out her hand, with a swift look of pain and dismay.
'Oh, don't go until the dame comes back—please do not! She would never forgive me! I did not mean to offend you,' and, to Harold's horror, the soft, brown eyes suddenly glistened over with unshed tears.
In his dismay at the sight of her emotion, he put his hand on her arm.
'No—no! I was not going! Offended—what should make you think that you have offended me? It is I who ought to ask for forgiveness, and I do, most humbly. I had no right to peater you with my presumption. Why shouldn't you be quiet, if you like? Miss Ethel—Miss North, I mean—I must seem a perfect bear!'
She sat down again, and laughed; but the music was a little tremulous.
'And I must seem a perfect idiot!' she retorted, with arch shyness. 'Do sit down, Mr. Woodleigh.'
Harold sat down instantly.

And don't think I am quite foolish! I—I live so quietly that a very little thing excites me. And—oh, I must speak out and risk being understood, Mr. Woodleigh.
'Yes,' said Harold, leaning forward.
'You—you won't take any notice of my stupidity, will you? I mean you won't keep away from the cottage because I am here? If you come every day in the week, it is very likely that we shall not meet, for I am out all day, and I have my little room. I am quite candid, you see! But, indeed, I am pleading for the dame. The dear, old lady looks forward so longingly to see you, or anyone from the Hall, and I should never forgive myself if any foolish words of mine were the cause of keeping you away, and robbing her of her chief pleasure in life.'
She spoke so quick and earnestly that the color came and went again on her cheeks, and her eyes glistened.
'All right; I understand,' said Harold. 'Don't be afraid, Miss North, I'm not over-sensitive; and, upon my word, what you say wakes my conscience up! It's a great shame, but I haven't been to see the old dame half as often as I might. You know, she nursed me through a long illness when I was a boy—saved my life, in fact.'
'I know,' said Ethel, nodding and smiling.
'And the least I can do is to run over and see her, especially if you'll like to see me. Miss North, you've read me a lesson. Poor, old dame!

Children Had Eczema
Treatment prescribed had no effect—DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT made through cure.
Mrs. Oscar Yanott, St. Antoine, Sask., writes:—'I have found Dr. Chase's Ointment to be a permanent cure for Eczema and other skin diseases. One son, while nursing, broke out with running watery sores all over his head and around the ears. Many salves were prescribed to no effect. The child's head became a mass of scabs and he suffered agony untold. He became weak and frail and would not eat and we thought we would lose him.
'Provisionally we heard of Dr. Chase's Ointment and it soon thoroughly cured him. He is seven years old now and strong and well. An older boy was also cured of eczema by this Ointment and we hope more people will learn about it so that their little ones may be saved from suffering.'
As a cure for eczema and itching skin disease there is no treatment to be compared to Dr. A. W. Chase's Ointment, 60 cents a box, at all dealers of Edmanston, Bates & Co., Toronto. Dr. Chase's Recipes sent free.

Oh, don't you be afraid! I shan't stop away because you are here—that is—' he added, quickly, and with a pause.
'Yes?'
'That is, if you'll promise that I shan't drive you away.'
She nodded and laughed.
'You will not drive me away,' she said. 'Indeed, it is not likely that there will be any occasion to do so. I often have my tea in my own little room.'
'We understand each other, then?' said Harold, with a sigh of relief.
'Quite,' she said with a bright smile. The next moment the dame bustled in.
'Well, Master Harold, tired of waiting? I've been as quick as I can. Now, don't look at your watch. You must wait a bit longer, and tell me the news; and perhaps Miss Ethel will be so kind as to play and sing for us? Ah, Master Harold, it's a treat! You didn't notice the piano, did you? Not you, I'll be bound.'
'Yes, I did,' said Harold, and he went and opened it, and looked at the graceful, quiet figure. 'Will you be so kind, Miss North?'
'Do, Miss Ethel, there's a dear girl,' said the dame.
She rose instantly, and without a word, and sat down at the piano.
'You must go and tell the dame and the news, Mr. Woodleigh,' she said, and Harold, obeying, instantly went back to his chair, and was immediately assailed with eager questions, put in a hushed whisper.
