GREAT GUNS.

What They Coat to Make and Keep in Working Order. The forging of the immense guns is a most interesting process. The rifled guns of the present are made by reinforcing the other over the original tube or barrel of the tube with rings and repeated layers of steel called jackets, which are fitted one over the other over the original tube or barrel of the gun. The jackets or hoops must fit as closely to the gun as if forming an integral partily to the gun as if forming an integral partily to the gun as if forming an integral partily to the gun as if forming an integral partily to the gun as if forming an integral partily to the gun as if forming an integral partily to the gun as if forming an integral partily to the gun as if forming an integral partily to the gun as if forming an integral partily to get them on is, of course, by heating, and thus enlarging them. When they cool they fit saught. It is evident that the exact size of the jacket and ring when heated 250 that it can be put in its place must be a matter of the nicest mathematical calculation. The coarse powder now used makes such havoe with the rifling of the largest gunst that 100 charges are about all that can be expected from them. The jackets and rings can then be removed and fitted to another, tube.

The various parts of a gun are not put together at Bethlehem, but are sent to Washington, to a department of the arsenal called the assembling room, where the tube is rifled, and the gun is finally completd. A steel gun of the largest caliber costs about $100,000. The ordnance of our modern navy is therefore one of the most coatly items for which Congress is expected to display a patriotic generosity. [Harper's Weekly.] The forging of the immense

THE TAMBOURINES RATTLED. Marriage of Two Savation Army Officers

TORONTO, March 28.—The local corps of the Salvation Army celebrated the day of hot cross buns by gathering at a marriage feast of two of their officers. The ceremony was performed at the temple on Albert street during the afternoon, and this central barracks became the rallying point of all the Salvation soldiery. The lucky groom was Brigadier Margetts, principal of the Canadian Training Home in this city. The bride was a fair English lassie who has just crossed the ocean to rejoin the lover of her youth. Staff Captain Ashton was the name she bore at yesterday's sunrise and the one that her comrades in the old land will chiefly remember her by.

The merior of the temple was gally decorated with flags, banners and mottoes. One reading "Weicome to Staff Captain Ashton" stretched across the front of the room, and various other appropriate wishes flashed in red letters above the platform. In the absence of Major Adams, Brigadier Holland performed the ceremony, which was of the usual impressive character. He was assisted by Brigadier Spooner of Hamilton; Staff Captain Banks, of Bowmanville; Staff Captain and Mrs. Read, and Captain Butler, of Uxbridge, who was at one time lieutenant under the bride in England. All the city corps were represented, and their bands united to form a strong musical combination. "The Musical Musketeers," who have just returned from a trip through Western Ontario, were present and led bination. "The Musical Musketeers," who have just returned from a trip through Western Ontario, were present and led many a ratting hallelujah chorus.

In the evening an immense meeting was held in the tempel, under the name of a wedding carnival. The happy couple were present, and came in for warm congratulations. The addresses and singing were of the vigorous style that was wont to characterize a "big go" in the early days of the Canadian army, and the meeting was striking success.

Cowboy Mary.

Disheveled hair, a face hardened reckless life and beaming evidences of tinued dissipation, dark, bright eyes have a keenness in them still, a dres worse for wear, that is, shiny with ag soiled with stains of siquer, a tall fo careless gait, a matter-of-fact way times and frequently an exhibition of may-care philosophy, a voice rather han musical—that's Cowboy Mary.

This is the company of the woman has been brought rather profinently before the public, and that will serve as an excuse for again putting her on the news boards. Her surroundings are like herself—rough, with no regard for appearances—a mean hovel in a bad locality.

A man died at Cowboy Mary's house the other night—a poor, wretched only neater by a stout policeman, went in to learn the particulars of the man's death. He had taken his own life by swallowing a powerful dose of "venshee."

"Yes, I knew that man," said Cowboy Mary, in response to the reporter's query. "He was a good enough fellow of his sort, too. He was unfortunate, like some of the rest of us, and like more of us, was a fool. I helped him out time after time when he was in a pinch for money. But that's nothing: I'd help anybody out."

"What was the man's name?"

"Name? I never asked him, and didn't care to know, anyhow. I called him 'Pete' and he called me 'Mary.' He never knew my name, either. Still we were well acquainted, and when he hadn't any other roof to shelter him he came down to my shack and wasn't turned away.

"I guess he just thought, sceing he was on death's road, he'd shorten it up a little, and so he concluded that he could get a room to die in at my house, and so he came in and died.

"He was an opium smoker—all used up with the poison—and was dying by inches, and I suppose he was right in helping himself off with the least possible trouble. You see, he had reached that point where he wasn't of any use to himself or anybody else, and I think that when a man hasn't got any excuse for living, he might as well go off and croak."—[Seattle Telegraph.
