The Tramp Was "At Home."

There is a terrace of three large brick houses on the south side of Dundas street in the very busiest part of the city. One of these houses has been unoccupied for some time, and the watchman at a neighboring establishment has been considerably troubled at nights to account for a light in one of the back windows of the vacant place. At first he thought his eyesight was playing a trick on him; or that the light might be a reflection in the glass of some outside glare. He watched it for several nights and then went to the next door neighbor and told him about it. They made an investigation by daylight and were much surprised to find one of the roome furnished in tramp style by an old straw tick and a few other attributes to a bed. The boarder had left part of his wardrobe behind him in the shape of an old pair of boots and a dilapidated hat. The furnace gave signs of having been used on more than one occasion. A lookout was kept the following night, and the next, but no tramp appeared. He had gained an entrance through a basement window.
