

Bloomington, Indiana,

March 2, 1920.

My dear President Geddes:

This year is the hundredth anniversary of the passage of the law by which Indiana University was founded. Since this institution is almost, if not quite, the oldest of the State Universities, we wish not only to celebrate our centenary but to arrange an occasion when eminent men may say from one or another point of view what the State University is and is to be and is to do. We plan a conference for May 5th, 6th and 7th to which the Universities will be invited to send representatives.

I am writing to you now informally to say that a little later this University will send a formal invitation to McGill University to be represented here on that occasion.

Very truly yours,

W. S. Bryan
William Lowe Bryan
