Querilie intends to offer better pay to technical instructors.
"We are already assured that several departments will take care of expenses, and first will inaugurate several small farm schools and dairy courses," says M. Querille. "These will be maintained throughout the winter, and spring will give the peasant the opportunity to put his new found education into practical use. I am certain this will offset the growing tendency of French peasants to emigrate. This tendency is especially noticeable in the mountain districts and here again we will make an effort to study the individual needs of the distriet, giving pupils training in horti-culture and forestry which will have a lasting effect upon French prosperity.

"As for the domestic science schools, the reputation of the French for thriftness is well known, but we will supplement this instinct with professional knowledge of sewing, home making and decoration and child rearing."

In short, M. Querilie intends to make French education practical and not pic-turesque, and is seeking the co-opera-tion of banks, trades unions and the government in granting ample funds. While the budget allowance is not decided, the law already provides that a certain percentage of all pari-mutuel wagers must be devoted to agricultural institutions, and from this alone the income for the present year is esti-mated at several million francs.
