A Fire Insurance Policy is no Burden to carry.

The effect from the lack of it often is the cause of BURDEN. You who are unprotected know the burden of worry and fear that steads through you offer is rung in—but all of this can be lispelled, if you are safeguarded within ACADIA POLICY. To have peace and tranquility of mind in this respect to rise above fear—makes a man a more courageous business man. To be amply covered with Fire Insurance not may protect your from ruin should you unfer loss by fire and lightning, but it trengthens your credit rating and addstability to your business.

Among many large business houses there is a preference for ACADIA POLICIES due to a considerable degree to the fact that they are issued by a strong, responsible Company, which for over half a century has been supplying the Markime Provinces, our rates are liberal; payment in case of loss is prompt; for we hold for the protection of all Policies issued GVER MALF A MILLION DELLARS.

The best moments of a man's life are the moments when, strong in himself, he feels that the world lies before him. Gratified imbition may be the summer, but an icipation is the ardent springtime of

As Loder drove that night from Flee street to Grosvenor square be realized this, though scarcely with any degree of consciousness, for he was no accom plished self analyst. But in a wave of feeling too vigorous to be denied he recognized his regained foothold—the step that lifted him at once from the pit to the pinnacle.

In that moment of realization he look ed neither backward nor forward. The present was all sufficing. Difficulties might loom ahead but difficulties had but one object—the testing and sharpening of a man's strength. In the first deep surge of egotistical feeling he almost rejoiced in Calicote's weakness.

The more Chilcote tangled the threads of his life the stronger must be the fingers that unraveled them. He was possessed by a great imputience. The joy of action was stirring in his blood. Leaving the cab, he walked confident to the door of Chilcote's house and serted the latchkey. Even in this small act there was a grain of individual satisfaction. Then very quietly be opened the door and crossed the hall. As he entered, a footman was arranging the fire that burned in the big grate. Seeing the man, he halted. "Where is your mistress?" he asked n unconscious repetition of his first uestion in the same house, The man looked up. "She has just nished dinner, sir. She dined alone in her own room." He glanced at Loder in the quick, uncertain way that was noticeable in all the servants of the household when they addressed their master. Loder saw the look and wondered what depth of curiosity it be-trayed, how much of insight into the lomestic life that he must always be ntent to skim. For an instant the old sentment against Chilcote tinged his altation, but he swept it angrily ide. Without further remark he began to mount the stairs. Gaining the landing, he did not turn, s usual, to the door that shut off Chil-ote's rooms, but moved onward down the corridor toward Eve's private sitting room. He moved slowly till the door was reached. Then he paused and lifted his hand. There was a moment's wait while his lingers rested on the adle; then a sensation he could not explain, a reticence, a reluctance to in ude upon this one precinct, caused s fingers to relax. With a slightly barrassed gesture he drew back slowly and retraced his steps. Once in Chilcote's bedroom, he walked to the nearest bell and pressed it Renwick responded, and at sight or Renwick responded, and at sight of him Loder's feelings warmed with the same sense of fitness and familiarity that the great bed and somber furni-ture of the room had inspired.

But the man did not come forward as he had expected. He remained clos to the door with a hesitation that was unusual in a trained servant. It struck Loder that possibly his stolidity had exasperated Chilcote and that possibly Chilcote had been at no pains to con-ceal the exasperation. The idea caused him to smile involuntarily. "Come into the room, Renwick," he said. "It's uncomfortable to see you standing there. I want to know if Mrs. Chilcote has sent me any message about tonight.' Renwick studied him furtively as he came forward. "Yes, sir," he said.

"Mrs. Chilcote's maid said that the carriage was ordered for 10:15, and she hoped that would suit you." He spoke reluctantly, as if expecting a rebuke. At the opening sentence Loder had turned aside, but now, as the man finshed, he wheeled round again and looked at him closely with his keen

"Yes, sir. And after that?"
"Nothing further. I shan't want you again tonight." He turned away observant eyes.

"Look here," he said. "I can't have you speak to me like that. I may come down on you rather sharply when my-my nerves are bad, but when I'm my-self I treat you—well, I treat you decently at any rate. You'll have to learn to discriminate. Look at me now!" A thrill of risk and of rulership passed through him as he spoke. "Look at me now! Do I look as I looked this mornslackened speed, then stopped alto-gether as the carriage fell into line outside Bramfell House.

The man eyed him half stupidly, half "Well?" Loder insisted. "Well, sir," Renwick responded, with some slowness, "you look the same and you look different—a healthier color, perhaps, sir, and the eye clearer." He grew more confident under Loder's half humorous, half hisistent guze. "Now that I look closer, sir"— Loder laughed. "That's it!" he said. "Now that you look closer. You'll have dressed crowd ostensibly brou to grow observant. Observation is an excellent quality in a servant. watted without impatience. Then at last the sound of a carriage stopping before the house caused him to lift his head, and at the same instant live appeared at the head of the staircase. She stood there for a second, looking down on him, her maid a pace or two behind helding her clock. The picture she made struck upon his mind with something of a revelation.

On his first sight of her she had appeated to him as a strange blending of youth and self possession—a girl with a woman's clearer perception of life. Later he had been drawn to study her in other respects—as a possible comraden other respects—as a possible comrade and friend. Now for the first time he The flag that flutters at the peak saw her as a power in her own world-a woman to whom no man could deny consideration. She looked taller for You turn away and with a sigh Shut out the sight of sea and sky! There! wait with me; the honied consideration. She looked tailer for the distance between them, and the distance between them, and the distinction of her carriage added to the effect. Her black gown was exquisitely soft—as soft as her black hair. Above her forehead was a cluster of splendid dismonds shaped like a coronet, and a band of the same stones encircled her neck. Loder realized in a glance that only the most distinguished of women could wear such ornaments and not have her beauty sclipsed. With a touch of the old awkwardness that had before assailed him in her presence, he came slowly forward as she f yours, I will rejoice to know ence, he came slowly forward as she escended the stairs. "Can I help you with your cloak?" he asked, and as he asked it something like surprise at his own timidity crossed his mind. For a second Eve's glance rested on his face. Her expression was quite im-passive, but as she lowered her lashes a faint gleam flickered across her eyes. Nevertheless, her answer, when it came, was studiously courteous.

"Thank you," she said, "but Marie will do all I want." then turned aside. He was not hurt by his rebuff. Rather, by an interesting sequence of impressions, he was stirred by it. The pride that had refused Chilcote's help, and the self control that had refused it graciously, moved him to admiration. He understood and ap-preciated both by the light of personal experience.

"The carriage is waiting, sir," Crapham's voice broke in.

Loder nodded, and Eve turned to her maid. "That will do, Marie," she said. "I shall want a cup of chocolate when I get back, probably at 1 o'clock." She drew her cloak about her shoulders and moved toward the door. Then she paused and looked back. "Shall we start?" she asked quietly, Loder, still watching her, came for-Then she ward at once. "Certainly," he said with unusual gentleness.

He followed her as she crossed the footpath, but made no further offer of help, and when the moment came he quietly took his place beside her in the carriage. His last impression as the horses wheeled round was of the open hall door—Crapham in his somber livery and the maid in her black dress, both silhouetted against the dark back-ground of the hall; then as the carriage moved forward smoothly and rapidly he leaned back in his seat and closed his eyes.

During the first few moments of the drive there was silence. To Loder there was a strange, new sensation in this companionship, so close and yet so distant. He was so near to Eve that the slight fragrant scent from her clothes might almost have belonged to his own. The impression was confusing, yet vaguely delightful. It was years since he had been so close to a woman of his own class, his own caste. He acknowledged the thought with a curious sens of pleasure. Involuntarily he turned and looked at her. She was sitting very straight, her fine profile cut clear against the carriage window, her diamonds quivering in the light that flashed by them from the ity that had pervaded his first entrance nto Chilcote's life touched him again then another and more potent feeling rose to quell it. Almost involuntarias he looked at her his lips parted, "May I say something?" he asked. Eve remained motionless. She die not turn her head, as most women would have done. "Say anything you like," she said gravely. "Anything?" He bent a little nearer filled again by the inordinate wish to "Of course."

It seemed to him that her voice ounded forced and a little tired. For moment he looked through the win-ow at the passing lights; then slowly his gaze returned to her face. "You look very beautiful tonight " he said. His voice was low and his man-ner unemotional, but his words had the She turned her head, and her eyes

Slight as the triumph was, it thrilled him. The small scene with Chilcote's valet came back to him; his own peronality moved him again to a reckess determination to make his own oice heard. Leaning forward, he laid his hand lightly on her arm.
"Eve," he said quickly—"Eve, do you remember"— Then he paused and withdrew his hand. The horses had then abruptly, at the moment when the sensation of familiarity was strongest, a cheery voice hailed him, and, turning, he saw the square shoulders, light eyes and pointed mustache of Lakeley, the owner of the St. George's Gazette. At the sight of the man and the sound of his greeting his doubts and speculations vanished. The essentials speculations vanished. The essentials of life rose again to the position they had occupied three weeks ago, in the short but strennous period when his dormant activities had been stirred and he had recognized his true self. He lifted his head unconsciously, the shade of misgiwing that had crossed his confidence passing from him as he smiled at Lakeley with a keen, alert pleasure that altered his whole face. Eve, looking back, saw the expression. It attracted and held her, like a sudden glimpse into a secret room. In all the years of her marriage, in the months of her courtship even, she had never surprised the look on Chilcote's The impression came quickly and with it a strange, warm rush of interest that receded slowly, leaving an odd sense of loneliness.
