IS HEAVEN MORE THAN EARTH? Ob, tell me, if flowers which never decay Are richer than blossoms which die in a day? If sweet, mellow bird-songs fall soft on the ear? I'll tell thee if Heaven than Earth is more fair?

er, tell me, if rivers which never run dry, Are deeper than brooks which go babbling by ? If skies never cloudy are tairer than night? I'll tell thee if Heaven than Earth is more bright! And tell me if honey is sweeter than galt?
If Eden was happy before the sad fall;
If innocent virtue is purer than vice;
I'll tell thee if Heaven is fairer than this?

Say, are there no unions forever to last;
A mem's y which never weeps over the past;
No hear's which are dreaming securely of biss;
I'll tell thee fighteaven is purer than this!

Oh, tell me if friendship is better than hate;
If sympathy binds up the heart that would break;
If justice is found in the regions of bliss;
Pil tell thee if Heaven is fruer than this!

And tell me if knowledge is sweet to the soul; If a part of a thing is not less than the whole; If shadows are fainter than substances are; Pil tell thee if Heaven than Earth is more fair?

Oh, tell me if spirits all sinless and free, Are happy, and higher than mortals can be; If wisdom and mercy and peace dwelt above? I'll tell thee if Heaven than Earth has more love!

JUDGE NOT. Matt. vii. 1. Judge not, oh man of mortal mind,
With judgment frail and weak;
Dare not to judge thy fellow-kind,
Nor harshly of them speak,
Thou knowest not the deadly strile Thy erring brother fought, While yet within his heart were ri'e,

Good counsels, early taught. But it the spirit proved too weak For error bold and strong,
No bitter taupts which thou may'st speak
Will e'er repair the wrong.
And then thy weaker sister, man,
Still gentler be with ter,
Seek not the burning flame to fan

Though she was first to err. Stery, harsh reproof will not avail
To turn her from the track,
Though gentle words will scarcely fail
To win the wanderer back. Than that of sacred lore, Where Jesus gently, kindly said, "Go, daughter, sin no more."

Not of one strength God made us all, Nor equal power to bear;
If then, vain one, there chanced to fall
To thee the liou's share,

Thy own account to Heaven,
For more will be required than where
Less s'rength than thine was given.

SNOW-SHOEING MORALITY. We regret to see that the tee-total zeal of our contemporary the Witness should have led him to attack the Snow-Shoe Clubs in a manner totally unwarranted by facts, and indeed opposed to all facts. The sole cause of complaint which the Witness has against these useful and cheery associations is, that their members are not all tee-totalers; and, that not being so, some of them use of their unpledged liberty to take a glass of ale .-This is no more an argument against Snow-Shoe Clubs than against human society at large, in which the Witness well knows that there are far more persons who drink intoxicating liquors moderately or immoderately, than there are of those who do not. Yet the Witness does not condemn society. He seeks to reform in his own way, those members of it whom he believes to be in error. The same course would be perfectly legitimate with snow-shoers; but nothing but pense of some other enterprise. that aberration of intellect which arises from the too exclusive cogitation of one idea, can AFRICAN EXPEDITION .- Some interest make it an offence to a Snow-Shoe Club, that ing items are received relative to the expedition of Dr. Livingston and his party. As to the statement that these Clubs encourage or countenance habits of intemperance, we should hope that the statement is made ignorance. Nothing can be more untrue.—A sot does not want to walk on a frosty night to Cote des Neiges, when he can indulge his appetite at the next corner. Nor is a person who, when he gets to Cote des Neiges, shall indulge himself in excessive potations, the sort of man to run home again, at the pace required. The Editor of the Witness is supposed to read the Bible, and among the spiritual lessons to be found there, are a great many common sense ones too are a great many common sense ones too often overlooked by enthusiasts. Do they do any great harm, if, for a few moments the rouse the echoes of the mountain's side, as they enter and leave the place. The editor of a Quebee paper narrates his experience. He says:—"OnSaturday afternoon while coming along George.street, St. John's suburbs, we observed a man, apparently from the country, attempting to drive a horse which was drawing a heavy load of wood, while in a pitiable state of intoxication.'
