McGill membership still lacks definition

By BARRY RUST
Canadian University Press

McGill University has seen a long, hard battle over the question of membership in Union Generale des Etudiants du Quebec or the Canadian Union of Students.

The cards now read two rounds to one in favor of CUS supporters.

But, unlike most hard-fought contests, the McGill battle has been losing fans and those remaining may not see the Pro-CUS group answer a fourth bell.

The first referendum on the more than two-year-old question was held in December 1965, when McGill students voted 2,895 to 2,548 in favor of CUS.

The result was declared invalid because of a lack of ballots at one polling station, and a new vote held two months later returned the same decision: 2,893 to 2,254.

After the second referendum, McGill's students' society president Sharon Scholzberg predicted, "The question of membership in UGEQ will never be over until we are members of UGEQ."

A year ago, Miss Scholzberg encountered no real opposition from CUS officials on their efforts to take McGill into UGEQ.

Then CUS president Patrick Kenniff expressed a "... belief in the right of McGill students to participate in UGEQ in the fullest way."

CUS leaders were generally content to express hope McGill would be able to participate in both unions, a view not shared by UGEQ's head, Robert Nelson, who reportedly predicted after the second referendum that McGill would someday join his strong, provincially-oriented union.

This time, even fewer alternatives were presented to McGill voters. The students' society was led by men of the so-called students "right"—opposed to the new activist philosophy of CUS, leaving McGill's Pro-CUS group with little more than an anti-UGEQ campaign.

The real significance of Wednesday's vote could hinge on the outcome of McGill's council elections this spring. If voters return another slate of "right" candidates, then McGill, now disenchanted with CUS, would be a very odd member of the even more activist UGEQ.

All of which means last week's move could amount to little more than a transfer of funds.

McGill might not think it is worth fighting a fourth round—at least of this particular fight.

Students scotch strike

VANCOUVER (CUP)—There will be no student strike at the university of British Columbia this term.

A record vote Feb. 8 scotched the strike referendum 5,747 to 1,963.

Said Alma Mater Society president Peter Braud: "Thank Christ". Braud and his council first backed the strike vote and then backed down and urged students to vote no.

The referendum was worded: "If the provincial government does not allocate $66 million for higher education next year as recommended in the Macdonald Formula, would you support a week of concern for higher education including a strike and would you serve on a picket line?"

The council was heavily criticized for both the referendum's wording and for withdrawing its support. The strike vote became the major issue in AMS elections also held Wednesday, although neither presidential candidate supported it as put.

Had the strike been called, it would have been the first time students at an English-speaking university in Canada had taken such action.

Meanwhile, UBC's Board of Governor's refused last week to admit Ubyesey staff members to report its closed meetings.

The reaction came in reply to a letter from editor John Kelsey asking the board to open its meetings to the public on grounds that the university is a public institution.

Kelsey's request was backed by the UBC students' council and Vancouver's morning newspaper, The Province.

Warned Kelsey: "This is just what we expected from a board composed of nobody but corporate elite businessmen. This is not the end of the issue."

Mock trial set for Saturday in law library

Patsy Pot, a third-year arts student, died after falling from the top floor of an abandoned house in Garneau.

Her death occurred during an LSD "acid party" on Tuesday evening.

Although details surrounding the fall have not yet been established, fellow "travellers" Lethal Limp-wrist and Laurier Leftist are being held as material witnesses.

A second-year law student P. C. Creep, has been charged with murder following the incident.

A mock trial based on the above factual situation will be held at 1:30 p.m. Saturday in the Dean Weir Memorial Library.

The trial is to determine whether justice can be done and if being on LSD at the time of the commission of the crime can be used as a defence.

Miss U of A contestants

A new feature has been added to Varsity Guest Weekend. Tonight at 9 p.m. in the lower Jubilee Auditorium, a Miss U of A will be crowned at the Miss U of A Ball. Vying for the crown will be the six young ladies at right, and Judy Richardson, Miss Residence, who is missing. The contestants are, from left to right, starting in the back row, Teddy Davis, Commerce Queen; Coleen Dean, Miss Freshette; Kathy Elias, Engineering Queen; Laurie Brennan, Miss IFC (front row, left); Peggy Walker, Miss Internationale; and Alice Lessard, Education Queen. Tickets for the ball are $3 per couple, and are available in SUB. Neil Driscoll took the picture.
