Grand Trunk Pacific, was the next witness. He told of receiving word of the murder and that he searched all the camps on his way up. "After we left Ferguson's camp we met the search party headed by Myles Macrae. We felt them past the right of way, and went about twenty rods to a little camp. There was a little boy splitting wood at the door. We went in and found the prisoners sitting on each side of the stove. The larger had his feet undressed and was trying to put on a pair of mittens. Both men had their feet frozen and Leon his hands also. There was an old man there up in a berth, I roused him up and arrested him. I then went to the prisoners and arrested them, and in Mr. Bissett's sleigh drove them to Plaster Rock. I searched Tony and found on him a second hand watch and $10 in money.

The solicitor general here asked have a conversation between Foster and Tony on their way to Plaster Rock be taken in evidence. Mr. Elliott objected and his honor sustained the objection on the ground that there vere two prisoners and as the conversation was between Foster and only one of the prisoners the answer might possibly incriminate the other prisoner as well. It came out, nevertheless, that Foster had asked Tony what he had done with the money; "Who killed the shot?" Chief Foster was not allowed to tell the answer.

Both prisoners were always well behaved and never gave me any trouble. I don't know if they had the gun when they came back on Saturday or not. Rainsford Lovely, the next witness, testified to meeting the prisoner on the right of way near Waski on Saturday between four and five o'clock p. m. Tony was carrying the rifle and Leon the shot gun. He said he had never seen any of the Italians with a gun
