THE ARCHBISHOP

Neil Cream and the Archbishop of Canterbury were, as you see, almost next-door neighbors. Only the Palace garden and a few houses separated the primate and the poisoner.

LONGEST RECORDED

Toronto, July 20, 1915—The longest aeroplane flight ever recorded in Canada is planned by W. A. Dean, the head of one of the Ontario aviation schools. Mr. Dean is negotiating with the Canadian National Exhibition for a place on their programme and if engaged he will bring two machines from Montreal to the Fair, flying the distance in about 100 miles. It is known no Canadian birdmen have done more than about 100 miles in a straightaway flight. The distance from Montreal to Toronto, as the bird flies, is about 100 miles. Mr. Dean formerly had a school in Toronto and one of his men made daily flights at the Fair a year ago.

KING IN DISGUISE

At three a.m. on Tuesday, Dec. 11, 1878, the King, disguised in the plain clothes of a country gentleman, wearing a black wig, and with a patch of black plaster on his face, further to disguise his features, crept out of the Palace and was driven to the Embankment in a hackney coach. There he hired a wheelman and was being rowed by Lambeth he leant over the side of the boat and dropped the Great Seal of England into the river. There had been seals in the river before, but the Great Seal was a decided novelty.

In the porch of St. Mary's Church there is a tablet to the memory of Mr. William Bacon, who was killed by lightning and lightning while standing at his window on the evening of 1787, and in the church itself is the quaint stained glass window representing a pedlar and his dog.

There is a tablet, with his pack on his back and his dog by his side, made money by his peddling, and and by his will left a piece of land in Lambeth to the Church on condition that his portrait and that of his faithful dog should be placed on the wall of the church. This strip of land was called after the donor, "Pedlar's Acre."

In 1905 the annual value was two shillings and sixpence. At the present time it brings about 1000 a year.

If Hannah Lightfoot really married the Prince who was afterwards George III, it was in this church that the marriage ceremony took place. There is a portrait of her in the church, the pretty Quakeress, whose father was a linen-draper, was really married to the Prince, but that is a matter about which values have been written, and which are probably more voluminous to come.

HE IS PATRIOT

By special wire to the Courier.

Pris, July 21—Joseph Caillaux, former premier, who has been the target of several attacks since the beginning of the war, to-day made a statement in his own defense. He declared untrue newspaper articles, attributing to him the assertion that France should have made peace with Germany after the battle of Charleroi. "I am as much of a patriot as any citizen of France," M. Caillaux declared, and nothing could be more fanatic than the declaration printed as coming from me. I declare categorically that every article representing me in the role of negotiator of peace between Germany and France is groundless."

INTERESTING RELICS

The free exhibit of war trophies at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, is expected to be one of the most popular features of the big Fair this year. In addition to the guns and other armament captured on the field of battle and loaned by the British Government there will be a large number of articles on view, private collections throughout Canada, made by citizens who have friends at the front and by officers and Government officials. Major Leonard, of St. Catharines, an old Brantford resident, has contributed a very interesting collection, while Surgeon-General Ryerson, just lately returned on leave, has also turned over his extensive collection of souvenirs. Brigadier General Hodgins has many relics captured in past wars and the present conflict, and these too will be shown in this unique exhibit which will be located in the Government buildings.

TO AFRICA FOR AN APRICOT

In the old churchyard itself you can see the weird tomb of John Turdecant, with crocodiles and creeping things about it, and read in forgotten letters all about the famous naturalist and antiquarian who, long before the days of Cromwell, went to Africa to get a new apricot.

And you can note the tablet in the wall close to the churchyard gate, which records that Bryan Turville, Esq., left a hundred pounds to the parish for ever on the understanding that with the interest of the same two poor Lambeth boys were to be apprenticed every year, but the money was left with the strict condition that the boys were not to be apprenticed to chimney sweeps, watermen or fishermen.

Close to Lambeth Palace the Bishop of Rochester once had a house. It has disappeared. If it had been there now it would have reminded me of the way in which a poisoner was dealt with in the good old days.

In this house a cook named Robert Rowe was suspected of having poisoned a few people. There was no time wasted on Bow street with more to follow at the Old Bailey in those days. The culprit, being considered guilty, was cooked alive in boiling oil. He was tied to a pole and slowly lowered into the boiling fluid.

I believe this is one of the few authentic records in this country of something with boiling oil in it, of which we have heard so much since the days of the 'Mikado.'

Along the Lambeth road I turn into the narrow passage between two high brick walls and find myself in Archbishop's Park. It is a portion of the grounds of the Palace which have been given to the public. It is a picturesque little park, with running waters and rustic bridges and seats in shady places, but the central grass is worn with many feet, which shows the extent of the children of Lambeth have appreciated their portion of the Primate's pleasure.

I have seen very little of the war note up to now. Khaki has been curiously absent from the gardens and the streets through which I pass until I come to a row of old-fashioned Georgian houses called Lambeth place, and then the military element comes to my eyes at once.

THE OLD VIC

In the first year of the old Cobourg's change of name to the Victoria, Faganini performed there, and made his first appearance in England.

In the last days of the old Vic, when its Vicar was proverbial, my old friend Joe Cave, who died quite recently, a poor brother of the Charterhouse, was the manager, and many a full-blooded transpontine melodrama have I witnessed there at his invitation.

A great friend of Cave's was Henry S. Leigh, the Caroller of Cockayne, and for a good many years my confidante on "Fun." I remember some lines of his from "A Villainous Ambition":

In Lambeth, at the Dragon tap,
Upon a day it came to pass
I met as affable a chap
As ever took a friendly glass.
We drank—a very little while

Upon one of the side walls of Bedlam there is a notice to the effect that all the ground to the extent of two feet eleven inches is the property of Bethlehem Hospital, and that any one encroaching on it will be prosecuted. As the space between the wall of the adjacent house is only a narrow strip, it seems a little difficult for the pedestrian unfurnished with a three-foot rule to obey the injunction.

It is utterly disregarded by three small boys who are playing wren-hunt all a foot of the wall. They are pretending, for some reason best known to themselves—probably the air of Bedlam is infectious—to be convicts, and their dark-colored jackets and snickers are liberally adorned with broad arrows which they have rather artistically chalked with some blue substance upon their clothing wherever there is room, back or front, for a broad arrow to be placed.

There is an uncanny fascination about the sight of this enormous building with its lofty central cupola and its far-fetching wings when you know that it contains a huge population, every member of which, with the exception of the officers, is insane.

From Bedlam I make my way to St. George's circus, where all the tram lines of the capital seem to converge and cross each other, and as I proceed to Waterloo Station I pass the Victoria Palace, where plays and operas at popular prices are now being performed in an excellent and artistic manner.

Outside the Palace there are posters announcing "Julius Caesar," and this cult of Shakespearean tragedy in the neighborhood of the New Cut brings to my memory the fact that before it was re-christened the Victoria and known variously as "The Vic," "The Old Vic," and "Queen Victoria's Own Theatre," it was known as the Cobourg.

At the Cobourg, in the nineteenth century, many of the great tragedians and comedians were in the bills. Edmund Kean received a hundred pounds for playing there two nights. Grimaldi starred there. Listen played there, also T. P. Cooke, and so did Gustavus Vaughan Brooke, the tragedian who made such a noble final exit when the steamship London went down while on a voyage to Australia.
