Bensen touched upon a scheme which follows in direct line with the stand advocated by this Great Home Journal in matters of civic government. As Ald Proposition of the interior of a blast furnace when in operation varies according to circumstances, but the molecular form when drawn off is about 1,500 degrees F., indicating a much higher temperature incide. ment. As Ald, Bensen stated, aldermen who are elected to the Council year by year, with no salary to blast of air which acts much in the reward them for the time spent in looking after the city's business, cannot afford to devote the whole of their time to municipal affairs, and their time to municipal affairs, and they cannot afford to neglect their own private business. As a result there are bound to be little matters ter of an inch thick.

The lining of a furnace will last to time, and sometimes the interests from two to six years, according to the of the citizens are much at stake. Much more would be expected of commissioners elected to salaried positions, and wherever it has been inaugurated it has found to be receases to be used, there is a quantity markably successful. The city should of iron which cools and solidifies at the not expect free service in the con-duct of its business affairs, any more salamander, and it is necessary to use than should any incorporated body. There is no doubt that many good men have been kept out of public service owing to the time it would require from them, freely spent, and in a city of Chatham's importance, the very best men should be pressed into municipal service.

A CONTINUOUS CONSPIRACY.

The Pritchett evidence connects the London conspiracy closely with the operations which have gone on for years under the auspices of the Liberal organization for the regular and systematic stealing of seats by skilled persons retained and regularly engaged and paid for their work. Pritchett himself ran a ballot switching normal school, and has under training at various times a host of expert deputy returning officers, some operating locally, some moved from riding to riding where the borrowed local names for temporary use. Certain of Mr. Pritcheti's employers, paymasters and fellow conspirators have been

A STRANGE ISLAND.

Curious Climatic Conditions on Sakhakin, Off Siberia-Has Two Cold Ocean Currents.

Ocean Currents.

Sakhalin, on the eastern coast of Siberia, presents a very ourious anomaly of climate. The island is bathed by two cold ocean currents, and in winter nothing protects it against the fey northwest winds coming from Siberia. At the sea level the snow falls continually and stays on the ground till the end of May, and the seashore is very cold. Farther inland, however, especially as we go higher up, the climate is modified—just the opposite to what is observed elsewhere. It has often been observed in Siberia and in central Europe that in winter the cold is greater in the plains and the valleys, and that the highlands have a sensibly milder temperature. It is as if the denser cold air accumulated in the lowlands. This fact is very often observed in our climate. There are several very good examples of it. All the trees and shrubs of a valley have been known to be killed by frost, while above a certain level, very clearly marked out, on the hill or the mountain, the vegetation has not suffered at all. The cold air often flows from the summits toward their bases. This is what takes place at Sakhalin. The cold air accumulates in the low regions of the island and on the coast. The higher regions have a more elevatived temperature. So it happens that the lower parts have an Arctic vegetation, while the intermediate altitudes have the vegetation of a temperate zone.

the centre of the island appear bam-boos, hydrangeas, azaleas and other plants that one is greatly surprised to meet and whose presence can be ex-plained only by the altogether abnor-mal climatic conditions of the island.

Great Bear Hunting.

Great Bear Hunting.

With a raking cross-fire from revolvers, two young British Columbia hunters have just put Chilliwack's largest bear out of existence. It was an exciting encounter that Thomas McKin-ley and C. T. Armstrong had with the monster, which towered six feet high as it advanced to attack the hunters, and measured seven feet when stretched out after the men had done their revolver-shooting. To make matters more than usually interesting, the nimrods were short of rifle ammunition, having only a load each in their weapons, and after these had been expended they were compelled to finish the bear at close range, in true western style, with Smith and Wessons.

The pair were hunting at Cultus Lake, near Chilliwack, when they heard the big black bear breaking his way the big black bear breaking his way through the underbrush towards them. At the time they were lunching on the bank of a small stream running into the lake, and had left all their ammuni-tion, with the exception of a single load on the bank of the stream, and as the bear came up he was met with a raking crossfire from their revolvers, which put him out of business. The hunters heard another bear in the woods, which they believed to be the mate of the black fellow, but it made off before they could secure ammunition from their boat.

A Tub by Any Other Name.

A Tub by Any Other Name.

The practice of moving an old steamer from one point of the Great Lakes to another, and hiding its identity under a new name, is one all too common, and is thus referred to by The Kingston News: "All over the inland waters of this country the practice of repainting and renewing old boats is going on. The object, in most cases, is to regain popular favor which may have been lost by an accident to the steamer, or its known old age. By the have been lost by an accident to the steamer, or its known old age. By the transformation an old decayed hull, impaired machinery and decks unfitted for the strain of a storm on the open take, may pass for a new boat. Now it does not need proof to convince any one that such boats are unsafe for either freight or passengers, and their owners should simply be ordered to break them up. Yet few such orders are given. The inspectors are, we fear, lax all trains run by in this respect. And vessels are perin this respect. And vessels are permitted to do business that place in jeopardy all property and person them."

Mark Twain while at his summer residence prepared one evening to take a drive and, expecting to remain out until late, told the stable boy that he need not wait for him. He directed the fellow, however, when he had finished his work to lock the stable and place the key under a stone the location of which Mr. Clemens described with much exactness. When the humorist reached home after his drive he was surprised to find that the key was not in the place selected. When his patience had been exhausted he awoke the boy, who explained as he started out to find the missing key: "Mr. Clemens, I found a better place to hide it."

William Wilberforce had a devoted slater. She is credated with having won his election for him during his membership of Parliament from Hull The story goes that one day at the hustings a number of partizans began a tremendous cheering, crying "Miss Wilberforce forever!" upon which stepped forward, and with admirable tact, replied: "Gentlemen, I thank you, but, believe me, I do not wish to be 'Miss Wilberforce forever!" Her brother was returned at the head of the poll.

Padded the Census.

When the last census was taken in France the mayor of Montirat, in the Tarn, thought he would save his townspeople trouble, so he filled up the papers himself, Reflecting that France is threatened with depopulation, he added to each family a boy here and a girl there and occasionally a pair of twins. He increased the population of Montrat on paper by about 100 souls. For this an ungrateful government has taken his office from him.
