A CABINET SECRET.

I made Robert Headley's acquaintance in the auction-room. I am an idle man, and having plenty of time, and occasionally a few pounds to spare, have gradually collected a few bric-a-bracs, the pursuit of which enables me to kill a good many weary hours, and to board up, in the shape of old china, etc., money which otherwise would be frittered away on equally useless but less valuable objects.

water, and packed the articles which had been so carefully packed in a bag. Then the bag was raised, and I knew that my venture was a success, but I dare not venture to say, lest I should break down faintly, for which I had endeavored to guard. It seemed to me infinitely preferable to seeing the contents of the bag scattered on the pavement than to find one of those explosive cups in my stomach. Even when the morning came, and I found myself in the state of a night, my dreams, my state was not very much happier. I could not bear to look at my cabinet. Something was waiting there, and until that void which my dear friend's death had left in my mind, I felt that I could find no pleasure in my former pursuits.

"It's no use, Mr. Headley. I will not sell them, and I love them too much to give away." "As she spoke a thought struck me. I would take her to the tea-pot, sugar-basin, and the other cups and saucers, and would see for their long lost brethren. So I concluded my resolution, and making an effort to smile, said: "It's no use, Mr. Headley. I will not sell them, and I love them too much to give away."

"I shall be glad to see you at any time, Mr. Headley," she said; "but you shall never have any china dealings together, so you are fairly warned." "I went home feeling very mournful, and for the rest of that day the eight cups and saucers, the cream-jug, and the two dishes were dancing about before my eyes. I sat down for an hour or more with my own pen before me. How strange it seemed to me! I took the pieces out and arranged the cabinet, leaving blank spaces for those I coveted.

The Wa-Hot Unreasonable.

"Add you say you would die for George?" "Die for you! Yes, a thousand times." "No, George, a thousand times, George." "My darling, you do not know me."

It will easily be believed that this second extraordinary answer did not diminish the King's astonishment, and he cried: "I declare one or the other of you must have lost his mind." "The soldier, delighted with the program he was making in a foreign language said with great gusto: "Both, your majesty."

Information cheerfully imparted. "Are you the man that answers the queries" asked the caller, removing his hat as he came in. "Yes," replied the man at the desk, "I am the man who has been established to the total number of persons killed in the Crimean War and flying away in the waste-basket a note asking for a brief biography of all the Presidents of Great Britain, Washington down to Grover Cleveland."
