HOMEWARD. BOWND

Monday was spent in preparation for the home coming, and we must confess that much as we had enjoyed the visit to the great Western city, and much as we had been favored and attended to by our kind hosts and hostesses Mr and Mrs Allen and Mr and Mrs E.F. Moore, we were yet willing to turn our face to-ward the land of the Maple Leaf, and to leave the City of Turmoil and return to the Town of Quiet. There may be those who prefer the hurly burly and the strife incident to the progressive and enter-prising cities of the great West, but as for us, having experienced the sights and scenes of both, we must confess we prefer to, live where seventy years are not crowded into forty, and where, although crowded into forty, and where, although toil doesn't bring great gain, yet every-one has it within his power, by care and thrift, to establish for himself a place deeper, than all earth beside—"Home Sweet, Home.", G.
