Harrowing Experience

Holyrood, St. Mary's Bay, accompanied by his son Stephen, aged 18, went in water 20 miles in length to get a load of lumber and in returning the wind which blew strongly all day veered to N.E., and blew a gale. Sea after sea boarded the boat and eventually submerged but did not sink her. Father and son were both washed out of her with the lumber which was swept off by the waves and the boy who was hit in the head with a board was rendered unconscious and went to bottom in about 10 feet of water. Both father and son were good swimmers but the accident to the latter rendered him powerless to use the art. The father who clung to the boat for a while when he did not see his son appear dived and brought him to the surface and speceeded in getting several planks floating near together on which he placed his son who recovered after a while. The father now became exhausted, being an old man but still shore a 1/2 mile away, shoving the raft on which his father lay before him. In this way both landed at a cove remote from any habitation and after resting a while the father revived a little.
