

Rheumatism A Sneaking Disease Has At Last Met Its Conqueror

Throbbing Muscles and Swollen Joints
Made Well.

RUB ON NERVILINE.

Old age knows no foe more subtle, more unrelenting than rheumatism. At first only a grumbling pain is felt. But, alas, it settles in the joints and muscles, and finally tortures its victims.

To-day the disease may be in the muscles of the back, thigh, shoulder or neck—to-morrow in the joints of the hand, toes, arms or legs it may work with redoubled fury.

Whether the pain is constant or occasional makes no difference to "Nerviline."

Because other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged. Nerviline has cured the worst of cases. It has brought health to those in the deepest despair. Has ended years of awful suffering for those who never hoped to be well again.

There is a marvellous healing power in Nerviline which it derives from the extracts and juices of certain rare herbs and roots. It allays almost magically the awful pain that only rheumatism can describe.

Congestion is drawn out of the muscles, stiffened joints are eased and limbered up, the old time feeling of depression is cast off, and once again Nerviline brings the sufferer to buoyant vigorous lasting good health.

Every home needs good old Nerviline, needs it for earache, toothache, headache, neuralgia, lumbago, sciatica, stiff neck, chest colds and sore throat. Wherever there is pain, congestion or inflammation, Nerviline will cure it.

CHAPTER XIII.

"I didn't wish him to know anything about it. It was such a stupid, careless thing for me to do. I was ashamed to confess it to you."

"Can you think of anything better than to consult Simmons?"

"No, let us send for him."

Mr. Simmons was not precisely ubiquitous, but there was often something remarkably timely about his visits. It was as if he knew when a lamb was to be shorn, and was desirous of being at the shearing. He was ringing the bell while they were talking of him.

"We were wishing to see you," said Lady Doreleigh.

"And it's always a pleasure to see you and Lady Flora," said Simmons, who was rather more familiar here than at Lionel's. He could, in fact, never forget that the great beauty was his collateral security. "Anything new?"

"Yes," said Lady Flora, "something decidedly new and disagreeable. The note you wrote about Sir Lionel and the death of Lord Barham has fallen into the hands of Lord Gree. A note should never be written that contains such tell-tale matters."

"It should never be lost either," said he.

"Well, it is lost, and Lord Gree has it."

Then they told him what Gree had threatened, and Mr. Simmons listened with half-shut eyes and puckered mouth all the while.

"I didn't think he had it in him," was his first remark. "He's very sly."

"Can you think of anything to do?" asked Lady Flora, impatiently.

"Would it be better to give up Lord Basingwell?" asked Lady Doreleigh.

"Wait a minute," said Mr. Simmons, closing his eyes almost shut. "There! Give up Lord Basingwell! Not without an effort. Will you leave it to me?"

"Have you a plan of any sort?"

"Will you let me act as agent for you and go and see Lord Gree?"

"What! and let him know what our relations are?" cried Lady Flora.

"Kreat Solomon!" exclaimed Simmons, holding his hands up in surprise; "do you suppose you are the only vultures? Do you suppose he doesn't know you get your money from some vultures? Would he be so saucy if he didn't suspect it? Don't worry about that. Let me go. Your interest is my interest."

"He is right, Flora," said Lady Doreleigh. "He will be the best one to go, and you will be no worse off than you are now anyhow."

"Very well," said Lady Flora, with intense disgust at being forced into such a relation with the money-lender, whom she hated, as one is likely to hate any necessary evil.

Mr. Simmons, on his part, was disgusted with the mischief that had befallen his plans, but put his wits at this without loss of time. He had an idea of a way to bring the matter about, but he carefully refrained from taking the ladies into his confidence, for the good reason that he was more intent on his interest than on theirs, and was, in fact, ready to sacrifice them to himself, as a thrifty money-lender should.

Knowing the habits of the young bloods of the day, as one could who ministered as he did to their wants, he waited until he was sure of finding Lord Gree at home, and then presented himself there. As Lord Gree had, fortunately for himself, never had any occasion to make use of Mr. Simmons, that astute gentleman had cast about for a way of persuading the nobleman that he was worth seeing. He wrote on his card, "Concerning a certain note which was picked up at Lady Doreleigh's."

This card was presented to Lord Gree while he was at his toilet, and he swore roundly at being disturbed by the blood-sucking something—as he called Mr. Simmons; but when he read the words penciled on the card he smiled in grim malice, and said: "Bring him right up here."

CHAPTER XIV.

"Oh, so you're Simmons, are you?" was Lord Gree's greeting of the smirking money-lender. "Never had the pleasure of seeing you before. Give me my smoking-jacket," to his valet. "Now you may go. I'll send for you when I want you."

When they were alone Lord Gree looked at the money-lender with a quizzical smile.

"What is this you have on your card about a note?"

"It is the note you spoke to Lady Flora about this afternoon, your lordship."

"Oh!" said Lord Gree, "and so this is where the money comes from, is it? I've often wondered."

"It's a dead secret, my lord," said Simmons, with an expansive and somewhat oily smile.

"Oh, of course. Well, what about the note? Some sort of proposition, no doubt. Go on. I'll listen, but I assure you it is useless to waste your breath. I hold the cards, and I'm going to play them. Eh?"

"Your lordship is so very clever," said Simmons, flatteringly.

"Ah, yes. But you have some reputation in that line, Simmons. Come! I want to hear this proposition. It'll be something rich, I'll go a fever. Say, Simmons—just think of it yourself: Simmons, the shark, negotiating for Lady Flora, the famous beauty. Come! The proposition!"

Mr. Simmons was only moved to wider smiles by this banter, but he said, deprecatingly:

"Don't be too hard on a chap, my lord. I know you hold the cards. If you did not, don't you know, I would not be here for her ladyship."

"I suppose you have an interest now. Come, Simmons! tell the truth."

—If you can. Do you ever, Simmons?"

"I'll tell it to you, your lordship, if you'll make it worth my while," said Simmons, slyly.

"Will you though? But, Simmons, is it worth my while?" and he laughed heartily over his imitation of the money-lender.

"I think it is, your lordship, but you can judge for yourself. Vich do you want the most—Lady Flora, or a settlement with Lord Basingwell?"

"Now, you know, Simmons, that is a dussily clever way of putting it. You knew I hated his lordship, then?"

"Certainly."

"Which do I want most?" repeated Lord Gree. "I think I want both so much, Simmons, that I won't disturb myself making a choice. I'll have both."

"Beggins' your pardon, my lord, but you can't have both, don't you know."

"Make that clear to me, then."

"Well, if you marry Lady Flora you think you are having a sort of revenge because Lord Basingwell will be so cut up, eh?"

"Yes, Simmons. You ought to be set up for another Solomon."

"Maybe I will. Did you know, my lord, that Lord Basingwell thinks Lady Flora is the very cream of sweethearts?"

"Quite likely he does. Just fool enough to do it."

"Well, he does, and if he marries her, and finds out she ain't so sweet—Vich he vill, for she don't like him, her mother says—won't he be broken-hearted? eh, won't he?"

"Very good, but I'll break his heart by marrying her myself."

"But, don't you see, my lord, that if you marry her—saying you can—only make things very much easier for him than if you let him marry her."

"You don't flatter her, do you?"

"No, of course, I don't flatter her. She'd be just the wife for a man that wanted some one to sit at his table and wear his diamonds; but that ain't not Lord Basingwell's vants. He thinks she's an angel, that's vot he thinks. And if he won't be the worst fooled man when he marries her, then never mind. Eh?"

"Now, do you know, Simmons, you are dussid clever, and you almost persuade me—almost, not quite," and his lordship leaned back and laughed.

"I don't say," said Simmons, never losing the sweetness of his temper, "that you can stop her marriage to him anyhow, mind you."

"Oh, don't you?"

"No. I'm only arguing that way, so's to look at the matter from your side. Now look at my side. Suppose I go to Lord Basingwell—he knows me very well—and I say to him, 'My lord, you must forgive me, but I've been a villain.' His lordship is ready to believe that without any urging from me," and Mr. Simmons smiled as he realized his own pleasantry.

"I'm following you," said Lord Gree.

"He vill ask for the special villainy, and I vill say to him that you over-persuaded me, and I wrote a note so you could use it against Lady Flora, whom you loved."

"You scoundrel!" said Lord Gree, grasping the niceties of the plan with a sympathetic instinct.

Mr. Simmons smiled as at a compliment.

"It would work, wouldn't it?" he said.

"Perhaps. It is a very good idea. Some things against it; but I vill admit that it vill work. Let us go back to your proposition. What were you going to propose? In plain terms, now."

"Vell, vot I vas going to propose," said Mr. Simmons, rubbing his hands in his extreme satisfaction, "vos this: Vot you vant is revenge. I know that vell enough. Let him marry her. You see, I vant him to marry her, so I'll get my share out of it."

"Yes, I can see that. But where is my share?"

THE JOY OF MOTHERHOOD

Words of Encouragement to Childless Women.

Motherhood is woman's natural destiny, but many women are denied the happiness of children simply because of some curable derangement.

Among the many triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is its marvelous power to overcome such derangements, as evidenced by the following letter:

Worcester, Mass.—"I suffered from female ill, and was advised to have an operation, but a friend who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and who has six children, told me to try it. It has helped me so much that I am now well and have a baby boy who is the picture of health, and I thank the Vegetable Compound for my restoration to health."

Write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for advice—it will be confidential.

"Hold on! Vot she's married I'm to come in for money, see?"

"Yes."

"I've got the papers signed and in good order. See? Vell, I get the money, and you come along and say to her, 'My lady, do you want me to show your husband this note?'"

"And she'll say, 'Show him what you please, my lord. I married him for his money, and I have it. You can't injure me now.'"

Simmons smiled and shook his head admiringly.

"Oh, but you're clever. I can get along, I think. Anything else?"

"I was only trying you, my lord. Here's the proposition straight: I've got two notes, signed by Lady Flora and her mother, promising to pay me so much on marriage. Each one for seven thousand five hundred pounds."

"Well?"

Your Boys and Girls.

If a mother wishes to give her child a real honest start in life she will feed the child at the breast. Nature's way of giving the child nourishment is the safest and best way. If you nurse your own baby, nurse it regularly by the clock and see that it gets nothing but water between feeding times.

If you are unable to feed the baby through the entire time or ten months in which milk is the main diet, be comforted by the thought that you have, at least, given your child a fair start. If your baby has been nursed and now you have to put it on cow's milk, it is well to give it, at first, a lighter mixture than is indicated for that age.

Figs are delicious baked several hours, with lemon juice and lemon rind to give added flavor.

Use skim milk instead of water in cooking cereals if you would add to their nutritive value.

War News

Previous to 9 A.M.

OFFICIAL.

LONDON, Jan. 29. Headquarters in France report the capture, northeast of Loos, of an enemy infantry attack, under cover of heavy fire. There has been minor artillery activity at various points. Elsewhere hostile attacks were repulsed west of the Arras Lens road, and northeast of Arras. The enemy gained a footing in the advanced trenches south of Givenchy, by a French airship-bombardment. In the Caucasus a large Turkish column was crushed west of Nulak, and Khryskaia, between Erzerum and Mush has been occupied. In Persia a large Turkish force was defeated south of Lake Urmiah.

BONAR LAW.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON AMERICAN NOTE.

LONDON, Jan. 29. A summary of Lansing's proposal in submarine warfare, reached London too late for editorial comment, but late editions in morning newspapers all give it a prominent place. The Express has a column head line which says, "Backing up Pirates: America's preposterous suggestion," and adds briefly that the proposal amounts to a "free charter" for submarines to hold up merchant vessels and ask that the merchantmen previously have been deprived of all means of defence. The rest of the newspaper concludes, is left to German promises.

ALLIES ACCEPT FULL RESPONSIBILITY.

NEW YORK, Jan. 29. The London correspondent of the New York Herald cables this morning as follows: "I am in a position to state that henceforth in all matters, including blockade, seizure of contraband mails, submarine policy and other questions, replies to notes from the United States, and other neutral countries will be in the name of the Allies, including even Belgium, Serbia and Montenegro, that France, Russia, Italy and Great Britain accept full and joint responsibility for all war measures and that the motto of the Allies is that they are gardeners, one for all, and all for one."

CONCERNING THE 'APPAM'.

LONDON, Jan. 29. The mystery of the liner Appam, which first place in the news of the morning newspapers to-day, and they all agreed that the prospect that she will ever come into port may be regarded as hopeless. Shipping experts believe that the steamer sank east Jan. 16th, northwest of Madeira.
