Money Plus.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

Said the Authorman's Wife, "I don't believe it."

Said the Wants-to-be-Cynic, "Was he married?"

"No," said the Schezerrade.

"Thought not," said the Cynic.

"I suppose he expected to make it up in what he got out of his life," said the Lady-who-always-knows-somewhat.

"Did he?" asked Molly.

And He Made The Money After All.

"I think so," said the Schezerrade.

"He was always tremendously interested in his work. And the most wonderful part was—that he made money after all. He was an expert in analytical chemistry and they call him now to testify in certain kinds of cases and give him big fees. And he lectures and writes too. Guess he makes as much as how he likes on top of it. Lucky chap, wasn't he?"

"Rather more than lucky I should say," said the Authorman.

And the Lady quoted:

"Work for the work's sake and then it may be that these things shall be added unto thee."

"I call it luck though," persisted the Schezerrade. "That wouldn't happen twice in a century."

First Find The Big Man.

"It would if you found a man big enough to give up the ten thousand for the $1200 plus the chance to do the kind of work he loved," said the Authorman, "you see he was a man who was thinking all the time of the money he was doing and not of the money he was going to get for it. That's one of the reasons behind sloppy work—the worker is thinking of what he'll earn and what he'll do with it and not of what he is doing. I catch myself doing that sometimes and that's the time I write the rotten stories. Find a man who thinks primarily for money and you get a man who with half a chance will get somewhere."

He Never Did Business Primarily For Money.

"Right, sir," said the Cynic. "You know Mr. H. (he mentioned a very successful baker who has built up a huge business from nothing) he said to me once 'I never did business primarily for money' and it was true and that's why he makes the best bread in the country."

"Money is a good thing," said the Authorman, "but money plus is a hundred times better even if it has to be less money."

"Plus what?" said the Authorman's wife.

"Plus a heart in your work," said the Authorman.

THE REPORTER.

The reporter is an agile young man who is hired to run down misinformation and turn it into news. Sometimes the reporter will get too much English on the cue and turn in a spicy chunk of misinformation, after which the city editor will be obliged to apologize on the front page in bristling brevity, double-leaded.

Reporters are kept on a newspaper so that people can see their names in print. Some people do not care to have their names appear more than four or five times a week, while others expect to break into every edition in company with a half-tone cut which can be read upside down without destroying the general effect. The reporter who can turn in the most misspelled names in a day is sure of steady work, and is of more value to his paper than a piano contest which leaves nothing but dreary memories and a busted bank account.

It is not necessary for the reporter to be educated higher than the knees.

It is not necessary for the reporter to be educated higher than the knees, but his legs should be kept in good working order, for without them he would be as helpless as a lobe in a shower-bath. Some reporters have better knee action than others and cover more ground than a flat car. This, however, does not interfere with their control of the English language, which at times is very similar to the world's record for bases on balls.

There are only two things on earth the reporter is afraid of—the city editor and the libel laws. If the reporter had his way, the city editor would be removed from our midst and obliged to work at some honest occupation. One of the most trying things that can happen to a new, self-proclaimed reporter is to turn in a long, palpitating story that sounds like a harp solo and have an illiterate, beetle-faced city editor tear everything out of it except the facts.

The first thing the reporter is cautioned against is the habit of libeling people who have paid in advance or are good for a half-page in the Sunday issue. The surest way to obtain riches and escape being libeled in some vital spot is to become a steady advertiser and live a life beyond reproach.

Reporters are born, not made, which should prevent people from becoming embittered and stopping—the paper while still highly delinquent.

The Gas Range!

The Gas Range means comfort for the housewife; shorter kitchen hours for her, and a cleaner kitchen. It is a great mistake to think that cooking with gas is expensive.

Whenever a woman becomes used to gas for cooking, thoughts of a coal or wood stove fill her with gloom. A gas range is so much easier to operate, so efficient for all kinds of cooking, and so much cleaner, that the idea of going back to the old style methods is decidedly unpleasant. Yet in winter many housewives think they must use a coal or wood stove, because there is no other way of heating the kitchen. THERE IS ANOTHER WAY AND IT IS FAR BETTER THAN THE OLD. THE CLOW GAS STEAM RADIATOR WAY. may 23, 17

WANT IN GERMANY.

The crops have failed in Germany, the wheat is poor and verminy, the sugar's full of sand. The drought did more than Wilson or our armaments could, and even the noted Pilsener is but a sticky brew.

The Kaiser, in his vanity swore war full soon cease; the foe, regaining sanity, would come to him for peace. Oh, hungry folk of Germany, what of your Kaiser's vow? Art ready to determine he has dealt you bunk now? Whose heartstrings ache and quiver worst—your heartstrings or the foe's? Your children cry for liverwurst, smear-kase and things like those. The little kids are clamoring, their faces wet with brine, and still the foe is hammering at Hindenburg, his line. Red Bill, profoundly solemn, of Gott must ever prate, and God has blasted Germany more than the British hate. And while Red Bill is blithering of backing from on high, the country's crops were withering beneath a burning sky. Oh, hungry folk, we sigh for you, as we go forth to kill; oh, starving kids, we cry for you, while swatting Kaiser Bill.
