Just Folks.

By EDGAR A. GUEST

CHILDLESS The day her little baby died The neighbours came and softly crie And sought to comfort her who wer

ptoe round the room they ste whispered to themselves things Which to our lips death always

The muttered wonderings, sweet and

And one there whose face was fair

Among the kindly people there, Whose hands were soft and very

Such as a little baby might Delight to play with, and her breast
Just fashioned for a baby's rest,
And this she said: "No child have I,
I've been afraid that it might die."

"Hark to the mother weeping there! Such grief as that I couldn't bear.

Oh, how I envy them to-day Who watch their little one at play,

Yet always I have been afraid
If in my arms a babe were laid
The Lord might come again some day
And take my precious one away."

Whose grief seemed pitiful to see, For she had known her baby's smile

If only for a little while, And spite of hurt and all her tears,

Sweet memories would grace her years And at the last at Heaven's gate

For her a lovely child would wait.
