

SELF-RAISED

BY EMMA D. M. SOUTHWORTH

The next week was passed in making the final preparations for the voyage.

When all was ready on a bright morning, the first of October, Lord and Lady Vincent, with their servants and baggage, departed from Tanglewood.

Judge Merin, leaving his house to be shut up by the Middletons, accompanied them to see them off on the steamer.

It was quite an imposing procession that morning. There were two carriages and a van. In the first carriage rode Lord and Lady Vincent and Judge Merin. In the second my lord's valet and my lady's three servants. And in the van was piled an inconceivable amount of luggage.

This procession made a sensation. I assure you, as it lumbered along the rough country roads. Every little isolated cabin along the way turned out its ragged rout of boys and girls who threw up their arms with a prolonged "Hooray" as it passed—to the great disgust of the Englishman and the transient amusement of the judge. As for Claudia, she sat back with her eyes closed and saw nothing.

The negroes came in for their share of notice.

"Hooray, Aunt Katie, is that you a-ridin' in a coach as bold as brass?" some wayside laborer would shout.

"As bold as brass yourself," would be the irate retort of the old woman, nodding her head that was adorned with a red and yellow bonnet, from the window.

"Hillo, Jim, that's never you, going to forrings parts as large as lier!" would sing out another.

"Yes, goodby, God bless all you as is left behind," would be Jim's compassionate reply.

"Lord bless my soul and body, what a barbarous country," would be Lord Vincent's muttered comment. And the judge would smile, and Claudia slumber, or seem to do so.

All this happened over and over again all along the turnpike road, until they got to Shelton, where they embarked on the steamer Arrow for Baltimore, where they arrived the next day at noon.

They made no stay in the Monumental city. Old Katie's distressed eyes had not time to relieve themselves by one wink over the wonders of the new world into which she was introduced, before, to her surprise and "astonishment," as she afterwards expressed it, she found herself on board the cars and whisked off somewhere else. And if you would believe her racket, she had to hold the bar on her head to keep it being steamed off in the night. And she was no sooner set down comfortable in the cars at Baltimore than she had to get up and outen them at New York. And you better had believe it, chillun, that's all.

Old Aunt Katie must have slept all the way through that night's journey, for it is certain that the cars in which she left Baltimore at eight o'clock in the morning did not reach New York until six o'clock the next morning.

After their dusty, smoky, cindery ride of ten hours the party had barely time to find their hotel, cleanse and refresh themselves with warm baths and changes of raiment and get their breakfasts comfortable before the hour of embarkation arrived. For they were required to go on board their steamer at ten o'clock, as she was announced to sail at twelve, meridian.

At ten, therefore, the carriages which had been ordered to convey them to the pier were announced.

Lower and lower sank the heart of the widowed father as the moment approached that was to separate him from his only child. There were times when he so dreaded that moment as to wish for death itself. There were times when he felt that the wrench which should finally tear his daughter from him must certainly prove his death blow. Yet, for her sake, he bore himself with composure and dignity. He would not let her see the anguish that was oppressing his heart.

He entered the carriage with her and drove to the pier. He drew her arm within his own, keeping her hand pressed against his aching heart, and so he led her up the gang plank on board the steamer, Lord Vincent and their retinue following.

He would not trust himself to utter any serious words, but he led her to find her stateroom, that he might see for himself that she would be comfortable on the voyage, and that he might carry away with him a picture of her and her surroundings in his memory. And then he brought her up on deck and found a pleasant seat for her and sat down beside her, keeping her arm within his and her hand pressed as a balm to his covered bleeding heart.

There he sat, speaking but little, while active preparations were made for sailing. It looked to him like preparations for an execution.

Lord Vincent walked up and down the deck, occasionally stopping to exchange a word with Claudia or the judge.

At length the signal bell rang out, every peal striking like a death-toll on the heart of the old man.

And the order was shouted forth: "All hands ashore!"

The moment of life and death had come. He started up, he strained his daughter to his breast. He gasped:

"God bless you, my dear. Write as soon as you land."

He wrung the hand of Lord Vincent. "Be good to—"

He choked, and hurried from the steamer.

The undersigned beg to give notice that they have retired from the partnership business carried on in the City of Calgary under the name of The Imperial Land Company having sold out their interests to David M. Smith and Benjamin S. Cook who will continue the business under the same firm name.

Dated at Calgary this 8th day of December, 1906.
