patient ear. "We must be very near the hill now. You will have to lead the horse, McKenzie, in this darkness; the dog may find the way through the broom for us."

"We must feel our way cautiously," McKenzie answered; "there is no call for capsizing the trap in our haste."

But there was call for haste if they were to reach the gypsy encampment before Gavin and Babbie were made man and wife over the tongue.

The spital dog-cart rocked as it dragged its way through the broom. Rob Dow followed. The ten o'clock bell began to ring.

CHAPTER XXIX.

I must now try to show what was happening in various parts of Thrums while the o'clock bell rang.

In the square and wynds: weavers in groups.

"No, no, Davie, Mr. Dishart hadn't felt the blow the piper gave him till he ascended the pulpit to conduct the prayer-meeting for rain, and then he fainted away," Tammas Whamond and Peter Tosh carried him to the session-house. Ay, an awful scene.

"How did the minister not come to the meeting? I wonder how you could expect it, Sneaky, and his mother ta'en so suddenly ill; he's at her bedside, and the doctor has little hope."

"This is what has occurred, Tailor. Mr. Dishart never got the length of the pulpit. He fell in a swoon on the vestry floor. What caused it? Oh, nothing but the heat. Thrums is so dry that one spark would set it in a blaze."

"I canna get at the rights o' what kept him frae the meeting, Femie, but it had something to do wi' an Egyptian on the hill. Very like he had been trying to stop the gypsy marriage there. I gae'd to the manse to spair at Jean was wrang, but I'm thinking I telled her mair than she could tell me."

"Man, man, Andrew, the wife o' lies wi' Peter Tosh. He thoct he was to hae sic a terrible rain that he implored the minister no to pray for it, and so angry was Mr. Dishart that he ordered the whole session out o' the kirk. I saw him in Couttie's close, and mighty dour they looked."

"Yes, as sure as death, Tammas Whamond locked the kirk door in Mr. Dishart's face."

"I'm a' shakin'! And small wonder, Margat, when I've heard this minute that Mr. Dishart's been struck by lightning while looking for Rob Dow. He's no killed, but woe's me! they say he'll never be able to preach again."

"Nothing o' the kind. It was Rob that the lightning struck in the doctor's machine. The horse waded into it, came tearing down the Road wi' the corps sitting in the machine like a living man."

"What are you listening to, woman? Is it to a dog barking? I've heard it this while, but it's far awa'. What a fearously still night it is!"

In the manse kitchen:

"Jean did you not hear me ring? I want you to—why are you staring out at the window, Jean?"

"I—I was just hearkening to the ten o'clock bell, ma'am."

"I saw a flash at the window just now," she whispered, drawing closer to him.

"There was no face there; the very thought of Rob Dow raises him before you," Gavin answered reassuringly, though Rob was nearer them at that moment than either of them thought.

"I must get away at once," she said, still with her eyes on the window. "No, no, you shall not come with me; it is you who are in danger."

"Do not fear for me."

"I must if you will not. Before you came in I did not hear you speak of a meeting you had to attend to."

"My pray—his teeth met on the world so abruptly it did confure up the forgotten prayer-meeting that, before the shock could reach his mind, he stood motionless listening for the bell. For one instant all that had taken place since he last heard it might have happened between two of its tinkles; and suddenly, instead of Babbie, he saw a congregation in their pews."

"What do you see?" Babbie cried in alarm, for he seemed to be staring at the window.

"Only you," he replied, himself again: "I am coming with you."

"You must let me go alone," she entreated with the cunning of love; "it not for your own safety, then for the sake of Lord Rintoul. Were you and I to be seen together now, his name and mine might suffer."

It was an argument the minister could not answer, save by putting his hands over his face. His distress made Babbie strong; she moved to the door, trying to smile.

"Go Babbie! Gavin said, controlling his voice, though it had been a smile momentous that he had seen her since you in his keeping it is not his will to give me this to bear for you."

They were now in the garden.

"Do not think of me as unhappy," she said; "it will be happiness to me to be all you would have me be."

He ought to have corrected her. "All that God would have me be" is what she should have said. But he only replied, "You will be a good woman, and none such can be altogether unhappy; God sees to that."

He might have kissed her, and perhaps she thought so.

"I am—I am going now, dear," she said, and came back a step because he did not answer; then she went on, and was out of sight at three yards distance. Neither of them heard the approaching dog-cart.

"You see I am hearing it quite cheerfully," she said. "I shall have everything a woman loves; do not grieve for me so much."

Gavin dared not speak nor move. Never had he found life so hard, but he was fighting with the ignoble in himself, and winning. She opened the gate, and it might have been a signal to the dog-cart to stop. They both heard a dog barking, and then the voice of Lord Rintoul:

"That is a light in the window. Jump down, McKenzie, and inquire."

Gavin took one step nearer Babbie, and stopped. He did not see how all her courage went from her, so that her knees yielded, and she held out her arms to him, but he heard a great sob and then his name.

"Gavin, I am afraid!"

Gavin understood now, and I say he would have been no man to leave her after that. Only a moment was allowed him, and it was his last chance on earth. He took it. His arm went round his beloved, and he drew her away from Nanny's house.

McKenzie found both house and garden empty. "And yet," he said, "I swear some one passed the window as we lighted it."

"Waste no more time," cried the im-

WORDS THAT BURN.

A LAST PRAYER.
[This poem was written four days before the author's death.]
Father, I scarcely dare to pray,
So clear I see, now it is done,
That I have wasted half my day,
And left my work but just begun.

So clear I see that things I thought
Were right or harmless were a sin;
So clear I see that I have sought,
Unconscious, selfish aims to win;

So clear I see that I have hurt
The souls I might have helped to save,
That I have sinned, in fact, in heart,
Deaf to the calls Thy leaders gave.

In outskirts of Thy kingdom vast,
Father, the humblest spot give me;
Set me the lowliest task Thou hast.
Let me, repentant, work for Thee!

—Helen Hunt Jackson.

INDECISION.
I've decided I shall marry,
Only I'm so hard to please;
Twixt two maidens fair I tarry,
One is Wynnie, one Louise.

Both are pretty appellations,
But by fashion disenthralled,
In their intimate relations
Wynnie and Louise are often called.

But a quandary I'm in, then,
Should I win Wynnie's heart, you see,
I lose Louise—should I win, then,
I lose Wynnie—which shall it be?

Very hard it is, this choosing;
Let I win, or Wynnie I lose,
Names like these are so confusing
I'm uncertain which to choose.

—Vanity Fair.

DREAMING OF HOME.
It comes to me often in silence,
When the firelight sputters low—
When the black uncertain shadows
Seem wreaths of the long ago;

Always with a throb of heartache
That thrills each pulsive vein,
Comes the old, unique longing,
For the peace of home again.

I'm sick of the roar of cities,
And of faces cold and strange;
I know where there's warmth of welcome,
And my yearning fancies range

Back to the dear old homestead,
With an aching sense of pain,
But there'll be joy in the coming,
When I go home again.

—Eugene Field, in Chicago News.

"Who hath not owned with rapture-smitten
The power of grace, the magic of a name?"
asks Campbell, the poet, in his "Pleasures of Hope." Pleasures of Hope, forsooth.

Many and many a woman knows them no longer. They are in despair about their health. They are run down, debilitated, suffering from what they know not. It may be dyspepsia, heart disease, liver or kidney disease, any or all of them. The sicknesses of women are cured by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. That's where the magic of a name comes in. This improves digestion, invigorates the system, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, produces refreshing sleep, dispels nervousness and melancholy, and builds up both the flesh and strength of those reduced below a healthy standard. It is a legitimate medicine, not a beverage. Contains no alcohol to inebriate; no sugar or syrup to sour in the stomach and cause distress. It is as peculiar in its composition as it is marvelous in its remedial results.

This was the first relief she got, and before one bottle was used the benefit she derived from it was beyond our expectation."
