SCOTT AND BURNN

The House in Which the Poets had Their Only Meeting to be Destroyed.

A local link between Robert Burns and Sir Walter Scott is about to disappear. The two great Scottish poets met only once. Their meeting was in the house of Principal Ferguson, the historian of the Roman republic, and a leading spirit of the literati of Edinburgh in his day. The house was a large and handsome mansion at the south end of the Solennes, with coach house and well stocked fruit and flower garden attached. The dining and drawing room floors were approached by a double outside staircase of broad steps guarded by a massive balustrade. Until lately the house Brewing & Malting Co.,

WHAT

LIFE INSURANCE IS AND DOES.

"A French writer has remarked that the two principles—association and insurance—are the levere which are able to move the world; and, in a sense by no means lacking its serious phase, life insuring any be defined to be an indispensable element of earthly happiness. There is no condition of affection which it cannot ameliorate; no danger whose consequences it cannot lesson; no condition of inevitable, the wise man should always find room in his mind for the thought that death may, by a moment for farewells to maind his most cherished projects, and snatch him, perhaps without a dying; but is has proved itself abundantly able to diminish the sad consequences of that inevitable, the vise man expected the same and friends. Now, life insurance will not hinder any one from event called death. There are times when no one can count upon a permanent possession of any-face with powerty and ruin. Your own thoughtiessness or extravagance; the betrayal by others of your condence; swift-coming and unheralded monetary revulsions; social or national-calamities; of the thousand and caractelents and happenings which go to make up the vast variety of human existence and experience—all these or any of them may within the period of the next few years, case the dark shadow of disaster upon you, and compet you to grope your way toward the pauper's gravo. This has been the hapless fate of thousands who have thus been forced from envied heights to take the plunge into misery's depths. Why should you be, more than they, exempt? An antidote to the possibility of such a sad experience is supplied by life insurance, which, in one of its many forms, offers to guarantee the payment to yourself, ten, twenty, thirty years hence, of afxed sun, which same smi will reach whomosoever you may designate.

"By means of life insurance, daughters may be dowered; sons established in business; widows continued in comfort and assured the social respect which competency commands; debts may be provided for during life and paid at death. Insurance renders all
