

Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.
Acts xvi. 31.

ing his glorious origin, breaking out to sing,

All hail the mighty monkey, all hail the ancient clam,
From which, through evolution, I came to be a man.

Picture an assembly of festive infidels singing heartily, to "some familiar tune," of the sublime anticipations which fill their bosoms, thus :

Between two vast eternities
Life lies, a vale of sorrow ;
So eat, and drink, and take your ease,
For we shall die to-morrow.

Ascending from our mollusk god,
A glorious path we travel ;
Our course, commencing in the mud,
Shall flourish in the gravel.

We recollect once, after pointing out the barrenness of infidelity in respect to sacred song, we were assailed by a skeptic, who stoutly disputed our assertion that infidelity had no hymns, and said he had an infidel hymn-book which he would bring to show us. We were thankful for the opportunity of seeing it, and so in the course of the day he brought along a little book largely filled up with Christian hymns, out of which the name of Christ had been erased, and "reason," "truth," or some other word had been substituted. And this was the way infidels make a hymn-book ; much like the man who promised to show cobblers how to make a pair of shoes in two minutes, and who, after having pocketed the admission fees of the crowd, coolly produced a pair of boots, and made them into shoes by cutting the tops off!"
