COURT CASES RESPECTING RESALE
PRICE MAINTENANCE

Question No. 645—Mr. Starr:

1. Are there any cases at present being held by the Department of Justice similar to the case in which a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada recently upheld the legality of the section of the Combines Investigation Act forbidding resale price maintenance?

2. If so (a) how many and for how long have they been outstanding (b) what action does the minister contemplate with respect to them?

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): The answer to question No. 1 is no. The answer to question No. 2 is as follows:

(a) There are four cases presently before the courts. In one case the trial has been held and judgment reserved pending the decision on the constitutional issue before the Supreme Court of Canada. In the remaining three cases the trials were postponed for the same reason. In these cases, counsel have been notified of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada and instructed to take the necessary steps to bring them to trial. In cases where inquiries are being conducted by the director under the Combines Investigation Act, these have been proceeding in the normal manner.

(b) See 2(a).
